PREFACE.

THE object of the Author in writing this Book has been to state as concisely as possible, and it is hoped with accuracy, the result of the decisions on the Law relating to Copyright.

No attempt has been made to discuss what the Law ought to be, although its present condition is generally admitted to be unsatisfactory, as is apparent from the Report of the Copyright Commission of 1878, where most of the defects are indicated and remedies for them proposed.

But, as there seems no immediate prospect of reform, it is hoped that this Book may be of use to the Profession as well as to those who are interested in this branch of the Law, and that its shortness may be found due not to the omission of what ought to be included, but to the exclusion of what is irrelevant.

CHAPTER I.

HISTORY OF LITERARY COPYRIGHT.

It is proposed to review shortly the History of Literary Copyright, which may be defined as the exclusive right of multiplying copies of a literary work after publication. It has at length been decided (a) that such a right exists solely by Statute, and not at Common Law; but the question has excited an extraordinary diversity of opinion amongst Judges of the greatest eminence, and is one of great historical, though perhaps not of practical, interest. Moreover, some writers on this subject at the present day entertain the view that the question ought to have been differently decided, and it may therefore be well to give a short outline of the history of the controversy and the main arguments on either side.

In the year 1474 printing was introduced into England by Caxton, and apparently remained free for fifty years. Then the crowned heads of Europe seized on it, seeing its effects on politics and religion, and in England the Crown appears to have claimed the monopoly of printing and licensing what should be printed.

Thus, in 1537, Henry VIII. published proclamations against printing without licence.

(a) Donaldson v. Becket, Bro. Parl. Cas. 129; 17 Cobbett's Parl. Hist. 953; Reade v. Conquest, 30 L. J., C. P. 209.

In 1555 Mary published a similar proclamation.

At about the same time the Stationers' Company came into existence; and in the year 1556, by a decree of the Star Chamber, it was ordained that certain named persons should be incorporated as a "Society of the Art of a Stationer," and that no person not being a member of that society should practise the art of printing. Extensive powers of searching and confiscation were at the same time granted to the Company, as well as power to make bye-laws.

In 1558 the Company's charter was confirmed by Queen Elizabeth, and "whether before 1640 Copyrights existed in this kingdom upon principles and usage can be only looked for in the Stationers' Company, or the Star Chamber, or Acts of State" (b).

At this time, therefore, the only persons entitled to print would be Licensees from the Crown and Members of the Stationers' Company.

In 1584, by a decree of the Star Chamber, it was ordained that every book should be licensed, and that no person should print any book contrary to the form or meaning of any restraint contained in any Statute or Law of the Realm, or against the true intent and meaning of any letters patent, commissions, or prohibitions under the Great Seal, or contrary to any allowed ordinance set down for the good government of the Stationers' Company.

Another decree of 1623 recited and enforced the above decree.

By a decree of 1637 no person "is to print or import any book or copy which the Company of Stationers or any other person hath or shall, by any letters patent, order, or entrance in their register book, or otherwise, have the right solely to print."

(b) Per Willes, J., in Millar v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2311

In 1640 the Star Chamber was abolished, and all regulations of the Press and restraints of unlicensed printing by proclamations, decrees of the Star Chamber, and charter powers given to the Stationers' Company, were deemed to be, and certainly were, illegal (c).

However, in 1641, the "licentiousness of libels" induced the two Houses to make an ordinance forbidding printing unless the book was first registered and entered in the Register of the Stationers' Company, and forbidding any person printing any book so licensed and entered without the consent of the owner.

In 1644 Milton published his famous speech, the Areopagitica, against this ordinance.

In 1649 the Long Parliament made an ordinance forbidding the printing of any book legally granted, or any book entered, without the consent of the owner; and this ordinance was renewed in 1652.

The dissolution of the Long Parliament was followed by the Licensing Act of 1662 (13 & 14 Car. II.), which was based upon the lines of the previous ordinances, and prohibited the printing of any book unless first licensed and entered in the Register of the Stationers' Company, and also printing without the consent of the owner, under certain penalties.

This Act was continued by several Acts, and expired in 1679. It was revived by 1 Jac. II. c. 27, and continued by 4 W. & M. c. 24, and finally expired in 1694.

Thereupon attempts were made in several successive years to obtain a new Licensing Act. Proprietors of copies had so long been protected by penalties that they probably did not think of other remedies. Although an action on the case had been begun in 31 Car. II. for printing the "Pilgrim's Progress," it was not proceeded with (d).

Finally, in 1710 the Statute of Anne (8 Anne, c. 19), was passed, and was entitled "An Act for the Encouragement of Learning by vesting the Copies of Printed Books in the Authors or Purchasers of such Copies during the times therein mentioned."

The preamble recited that—

WHEREAS printers &c. have of late frequently taken the liberty of printing, reprinting, and republishing books without the consent of the authors or proprietors of such books: For the preventing such practice and for the encouragement of learned men to compose and write useful books, be it enacted that—

1. From the 10th of April, 1710, the author of any book already printed who shall not have transferred the right shall have the sole right and liberty of printing such book for the term of twenty-one years, to commence from the said 10th of April, and no longer, and that the author of any book not yet printed, and his assigns, shall have a similar right for fourteen years from first publication, and no longer.

9. Provided that nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend either to prejudice or confirm any right that any person claims to have to the printing or reprinting any book or copy of a book already printed or hereafter to be printed.

11. Provided always, that after the expiration of the said term of fourteen years the sole right of printing or disposing of copies shall return to the authors thereof, if they are then living, for another term of fourteen years.

It will be necessary later on to discuss the terms of this Statute rather more in detail; at present it may be remarked that it is the first Statute directed to the encouragement of learning, all the previous decrees and ordinances having been passed for political and religious purposes with a view to suppressing blasphemous or seditious works.

(d) Ponder v. Bradyl, Lillie's Entries, 67.

It will be seen that the question of Common Law Copyright in the case of old copies could not arise for twenty-one years from the 10th April, 1710—i.e. till after the 10th April, 1731—and the cases on Copyright before the Statute are, as might be expected, disputes between patentees of the Crown, or between members of the Stationers' Company and patentees of the Crown. For this reason these cases do not throw any conclusive light upon the question whether Copyright existed at Common Law, but the following may be cited.

In 1666, in Atkins's Case (e), the question was between the law-patentee and some members of the Stationers' Company as to the right to print "Rolls' Abridgment." It was urged for the plaintiff that a copyright was a thing acknowledged by the Common Law, that the King had this right, and had granted it to the plaintiff. An injunction was granted by the Lord Chancellor, whose decision was affirmed by the House of Lords.

In 1670, in Roper v. Streater (f), the plaintiff had bought from Mr. Justice Croke's executors the third part of his "Reports." The defendant was law-patentee, and had reprinted it without plaintiff's consent. Plaintiff brought an action of debt under the Licensing Act. Defendant pleaded the King's grant, and plaintiff demurred. It was adjudged for the plaintiff in the Common Pleas, and this was only reversed in the Lords on the ground that the copy belonged to the King.

In 1678, in the case of The Stationers' Company v. Skinner (g), the plaintiffs, as grantees of the Crown, brought an action against defendant for printing "Gadsbury's Almanac." An injunction was granted, (e) 4 Burr. 2315; Carter, 89.

(f) 4 Burr. 2316; Skinner, 234.

(g) 4 Burr. 2316; 1 Mod. 256.

and it was said: "The additions of prognostications do not alter the case; no more than if a man should claim a property in another man's copy by reason of some inconsiderable additions of his own."

After the Statute there are several cases of injunctions granted by a Court of Equity.

1735. Eyre v. Walker (h). An injunction was granted restraining the defendant from printing "The Whole Duty of Man," the first assignment of which had been made in 1657. In the same year, in Motte v. Falkner (h), an injunction was granted to restrain the printing of Pope's and Swift's "Miscellanies."

1736. Walthoe v. Walker (h). Injunction granted for printing Nelson's "Fasts and Festivals," though it was printed in the lifetime of the author, who died in 1714.

1739. Tonson et alii v. Walker (h). Injunction granted to restrain defendant from printing Milton's "Paradise Lost," the plaintiffs deriving their title under an assignment from the author in 1667.

1760. In Tonson v. Collins (i) the question as to the Common Law right was twice argued in a Court of Law, but no decision was given, because it was thought that the action was a collusive one.

In 1769 the celebrated case of Millar v. Taylor (k) was decided. Thomson had printed and published his work, "The Seasons," between 1727 and 1729, and had in the latter year sold the copyright to the plaintiff. In 1763—i. e. after the statutory term had expired—the defendant published the book without the plaintiff's consent. The question therefore was whether there was a Common Law right, and this question was answered in the affirmative by Willes, J., Aston, J., and Lord Mansfield, C. J. (Yates, J., differing).

(h) 4 Burr. 2325.

(i) 1 Wm. Blackstone, 301.

(k) 4 Burr. 2303.

In the judgments in this case, and the arguments in the case of Tonson v. Collins (l), most of the history of the Law of Copyright is to be found.

Finally, in 1774, the question came before the House of Lords in the case of Donaldson v. Becket (m), the facts being practically the same as in Millar v. Taylor. A perpetual injunction was granted by the Lord Chancellor against the defendant, who appealed to the House of Lords.

The Judges were called in to give their opinions upon certain questions, of which it is only necessary to set out three:—

1. Whether at Common Law an author of any book, or literary composition had the sole right of first printing and publishing the same for sale, and might bring an action against any person who printed, published, and sold the same without his consent?
2. If the author had such right originally, did the law take it away upon his printing and publishing such book or literary composition; and might any person afterwards reprint and sell, for his own benefit, such book or literary composition against the will of the author?
3. If such action would have lain at Common Law, is it taken away by the Statute of 8th Anne? And is an author by the said Statute precluded from every remedy, except on the foundation of the said Statute, and on the terms and conditions prescribed thereby?

To the first question ten Judges answered in the affirmative, and one in the negative.

(l) 1 Wm. Blackstone, 301.

(m) 4 Burr. 2408; Bro. Parl. Cas. 129; 17 Cobbett's Parl. Hist. 954, 1003.

To the second question seven Judges answered in the negative, and four in the affirmative.

To the third question six Judges answered in the affirmative, and five in the negative.

Lord Mansfield did not express his opinion, as it was unusual for a peer to support his own judgment on an appeal to the House of Lords, but it was notorious that he concurred with the majority of the Judges on the first and second questions, and with the minority on the third (n).

The Lords, on the motion of Lord Camden, reversed the decree, and decided against the Common Law right (o).

The main arguments adduced on either side were:

For the Common Law right—

1. The decrees of the Star Chamber, the ordinances of the Long Parliament, and the Licensing Act (13 & 14 Car. II.) appear from their language to recognise a Common Law right.
2. The cases before the Statute recognise such a right in the Crown, and this is only a Common Law right, because the Crown had no prerogative over printing generally.
3. The cases in Equity after the Statute assume such a right to exist, because (A) under the Statute protection was granted to owners of works who had entered them in the Register of the Stationers' Company, and yet injunctions were granted in cases where there was no entry; (B) under the Statute proceedings must be taken within three months after the offence was committed, yet injunctions were granted where the Bill in Chancery was not brought within three months.

(n) 4 Burr. 2417.

(o) Bro. Parl. Cas. 129; and 17 Cobbett's Parl. Hist. 953.

4. An author has a property in an unpublished work (p), and this cannot be taken away from him by the fact of publication.

Against the right—

1. The decrees of the Star Chamber and the ordinances of the Long Parliament were illegal, and only applied to members of the Stationers' Company.
2. In the early days of printing the prerogative of the Crown ran high, and the Crown claimed the right of regulating printing.
3. Literary works do not differ from other inventions: therefore an author may have the sole right of first publishing his work, but after publication his rights depend upon Statute.
4. Injunctions granted by a Court of Equity do not decide the legal right.
5. The terms of the Statute are decisive, inasmuch as it vests the rights, and enacts that they shall exist for the times specified, and no longer.

Such were the main arguments upon either side, and, as before stated, the House of Lords finally decided that after the expiration of the statutory period no Common Law right exists.

It was also subsequently decided that during the statutory period no concurrent Common Law right exists (q).

The decision in Donaldson v. Becket has frequently been approved in later cases (r), and the law has been settled to the same effect in America (s).

(p) Webb v. Rose, 4 Burr. 2330; Pope v. Curl, ibid.; Duke of Queensberry v. Shebbeare, ibid.; Forrester v. Waller, ibid.

(q) Reado v. Conquest, 30 L. J., C. P. 209.

The matter has been dealt with at some length in the foregoing pages on account of its historical interest, and because several modern writers appear to question the correctness of the decision.

It remains to add that, by 54 Geo. III. c. 15, the term of Copyright granted by the Statute of Anne was extended; and in 1842 an Act, known as Talfourd's Act (t), was passed, which repealed the previous Acts, and by which Literary Copyright is at present regulated.

Copyright Commission.—In the year 1878 a Copyright Commission took evidence, and issued a Report containing various recommendations, but up to the present time little further has been done by the Legislature. Appended to the Report is a Digest of the Law relating to Copyright prepared by the late Sir James Stephen; and it is difficult, after studying the Digest, to avoid the conclusion that, as long, at any rate, as this branch of the law remains in its present condition, it is impossible to deal with it adequately in a short digest.

CHAPTER II.

UNPUBLISHED WORKS.

IN the case of a published work, as has been seen, Copyright, or the exclusive right of multiplying copies, is the creation of and depends entirely upon Statute. But the word "Copyright" is also sometimes used to denote the right of an author in his unpublished work (a), and this right depends not upon Statute but upon Common Law. That the author of any literary composition has at Common Law the sole right of first printing and publishing the same for sale has been recognised from a very early date (b). In the words of Lord Brougham, "The right of the author before publication we may take to be unquestioned, and we may even assume that it never was, when accurately defined, denied. He has the undisputed right to his manuscript; he may withhold or he may communicate it; and, communicating, he may limit the number of persons to whom it is imparted, and impose such conditions as he pleases upon their use of it. The fulfilment of the annexed conditions he may proceed to enforce, and for their breach he may claim compensation (c)."

(a) See per Parke, B., Jefferies v. Boosey, 4 H. L. Cas. 919.

(b) See answers of Judges to first question in Donaldson v. Becket, ante, p. 7.

(c) 4 H. L. Cas. p. 962.

An author who commits to paper a literary composition belonging to himself has a right to the paper and to as many copies as he chooses to make for himself or his friends (d).

Literary Property.—An author has also a literary property in his composition (e).

Thus, an injunction was granted to restrain a defendant from printing the precedents of conveyancing which had been stolen from the chambers of the plaintiff (f), or notes which had been copied by the clerk of a person to whom the author had lent them (g). So where the author of an unpublished farce specially permitted it to be represented on several occasions, and the defendants sent a shorthand writer to one representation, and from his notes published the first act of the farce in a magazine belonging to them, an injunction was granted (h).

The owner of unpublished etchings was held entitled to restrain the publication of a catalogue of such etchings as being an invasion of his property (i); and the receiver of letters who had returned the originals was restrained from publishing copies expressly on the ground of invasion of literary property (k).

(d) 4 H. L. Cas. 919.

(e) Southey v. Sherwood, 2 Merivale 435. It is difficult to distinguish between (1) the right to the manuscript; (2) the right to the composition as a literary property; and (3) the right to enforce the conditions, express or implied, under which an author has entrusted another with his manuscript. For instance, if A. lends his manuscript to B. to peruse and return, and B. refuses to return it, and publishes a copy, he will have infringed all the above-mentioned rights. And it is obvious that most cases of this description will fall under more than one of the three divisions.

Implied Trust.—The author of an unpublished work is also protected where he has entrusted it to another upon the condition that it shall not be published (l), and such a condition will be implied under certain circumstances. Thus where the owner of certain unpublished etchings sent some plates to a printer in order to have impressions printed for private circulation, and the defendant obtained possession of certain impressions and published a catalogue of them, it was held that there must have been a breach of an implied condition by the printer or by some other person, and that defendant was not entitled to publish the catalogue (m). Where the proprietor of copyright in a picture, before registration, sent it to be copied, a condition was implied that no copies were to be made except those ordered (n); and so in the case of a photograph (o).

Again, where a manuscript of the Earl of Clarendon's History had been delivered by him to another person, a condition was held to be implied that it was not to be published (p).

Where a painter assigned to the plaintiff the copyright in the engraving of a picture, and lent the picture to him with permission to exhibit it for the purpose of getting subscriptions for the engraving, it was held that there had been no publication of the picture, and an injunction was granted against the defendant, who, having seen the picture, had arranged a scene in exact imitation of it, and had taken and sold coloured photographs of this scene (q).

(q) Turner v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 121; affirmed at p. 510.

On a similar principle it was held that the composer of an opera, which had never been performed publicly, but was merely in rehearsal, was entitled to restrain a newspaper from publishing the plot of the play, because there must have been a breach of trust on the part of some employé of the author in revealing the plot to the newspaper (r).

A very recent case well exemplifies the rights of an author in his published and unpublished work. The facts were as follows:—

A company obtained information from the Stock Exchange with reference to the prices of stocks and shares, and published a newspaper six times daily containing such prices. The company also telegraphed these "tape prices" to members of the Stock Exchange, who subscribed for that purpose, but upon the express condition that this information should be solely used by the subscribers for the purposes of their business. The defendant—an outside broker who had originally been a subscriber, but whom the plaintiff company refused to continue as such—obtained the tape prices from a subscriber, and published them in his office.

The plaintiffs sought to restrain him from infringing their copyright in the newspaper (which was registered), and also from obtaining copies of the plaintiffs' tapes, and on both grounds an injunction was granted. In other words, it was held that, by communicating the tape prices to their subscribers, the plaintiffs had not published them, and also that they had a literary property in the unpublished matter (s).

Letters.—The cases as to letters also fall under this head.

The property in the paper on which a letter is written is in the receiver, who can maintain detinue for it, even against the sender, if the letter has come into the latter's hands (t). But the writer retains such an interest, if not a property, in the letter as to be entitled to restrain its publication (u); and the consent of the writer to the publication is not to be implied from the fact that he refused to receive back the letters (w). An exception to this rule was made where the publication of the letters was necessary in order to vindicate the character of the receiver from a charge made by the sender of having misrepresented the contents of the letters (x), but this exception will be strictly confined (y). Where the solicitor to a company wrote a letter to a shareholder, it was held by Lord Romilly, M. R., that the letter belonged to the company, not to the solicitor (z). In a dispute between the receiver of a letter and a stranger, the receiver may be ordered to produce the letter, and an undertaking must be given not to use it for any collateral purpose (a).

Lectures.—Upon the same principle of an implied condition, it has been decided that where lectures have been delivered, not to the public generally, but to a limited audience, although any member of the audience may take notes of the lectures for his own instruction in shorthand or otherwise, the lecturer will be entitled to restrain the publication of anything which amounts to a reproduction of his lecture (b). It does not seem to make any difference whether the lecturer has committed his lectures to the form of a manuscript or not (c); and the condition is implied from the relationship between the lecturer and his audience (d).

The appointment of the lecturer may be a public one; but it will not follow that his lectures are published to the world at large by delivery. This will depend upon the duties prescribed to the lecturer, and upon the conditions under which he delivers his lectures: e.g. whether to the public generally (as usually may be the case with sermons), or to a limited audience (as in the case of lectures at a University). Nor does the Statute (e) relating to lectures affect the question, because that Statute merely secures to lecturers who have complied with certain conditions the exclusive property in their lectures, both in cases where the Common Law would have protected them, and where, apart from the Statute, the delivery of the lectures would have amounted to publication (f). This Statute, it may be observed, is very rarely taken advantage of: its provisions are set out at the end of this book.

Fraud.—An author possesses the further right at Common Law of preventing another from publishing a work in such a way as to deceive the public into believing it to be the work of the original author.

This right is independent of any question of copyright or literary property, and depends upon the principle that a man will be restrained from injuring another, who is lawfully carrying on his business, by doing acts calculated to deceive the public into confusing the two businesses (g). Thus, although there is no copyright in the title of a book or newspaper (h), there may be something analogous to a trade mark, and it will be Common Law fraud for a man to attempt to pass off his book as that of another (i); and if the similarity is calculated to deceive it is immaterial that there was no intention to do so (k).

It must, therefore, be a question of fact in each case whether the acts done are calculated to deceive, and all the circumstances must be taken into account—e.g. similarity of type or appearance as well as similarity of name—but a similarity of name is strong, though not conclusive, evidence that the work is calculated to deceive (l). In analogy to the law relating to trade marks, the advertisement of an intention to use a name does not give an author the right to restrain another from using that name for his work; there must be actual user (m). Thus, where a man had extensively advertised a magazine as about to appear at a later date under the name of “Belgravia,” but before that date the defendant published a magazine under the same name, an injunction was refused on the ground that the original projector had not actually produced and put upon the market his magazine, and so had not acquired a right to restrain another from using the name “Belgravia” (n).

(g) See per Bowen, L. J., in Walter v. Emmott, 54 L. J., Ch. 1059, and 53 L. T., N. S. 437. Weldon v. Dicks, 10 Ch. D. 247, is on this point overruled by Dicks v. Yates, infra.

(i) See per Lush, L. J., in Dicks v. Yates, 18 Ch. D. 76; Kelly v. Hutton, supra; Walter v. Emmott, supra; Metzler v. Wood, 8 Ch. D. 606.

(m) Maxwell v. Hogg, L. R., 2 Ch. 307.

(n) Ibid.; cf. The Primrose Press Agency Co. v. Mark Knowles and Others, 2 Times L. R. 404.

The use of a name must have gone on for a reasonable time in order to give the person using it an exclusive right to such user. Thus, where the plaintiffs had sold a small number of copies of a paper for a few days, they were held to have no title to restrain the defendants from using a similar name (o). Moreover, the name must be such that the public would reasonably suppose it to be exclusively used by one person only, and would naturally be deceived if it were used by another. Thus, it was held that a man had no such exclusive right to use the words "Post Office" in connection with his Directory as to prevent another from using the same title in connection with another Directory, which was not in other respects a colourable imitation of the former (p). The fact that a certain number of persons have been deceived by a similarity of name is not sufficient: there must be a reasonable probability of injury to the person entitled to the exclusive use of a name (q). Thus, where the proprietor of The Morning Post sought to restrain the defendants from publishing a paper entitled The Evening Post, it was held that, although some persons had been deceived into thinking that the two papers were published by the plaintiff, yet that, taking all the circumstances into consideration, there was not such a reasonable probability of injury to the plaintiff as to entitle him to an injunction (r). In that case, which was considered to be on the border-line, it was said by Cotton, L. J., that each case must be decided according to its particular circumstances, and that no case would be an authority for any other. It is, therefore, unnecessary to elaborate the decisions on the point, but the question will be found to have been discussed in the cases below cited, in addition to those previously mentioned (s).

In ex parte Foss (t) it was held that the right to publish a newspaper was "goods and chattels" within the meaning of the "order and disposition" clause of the Bankruptcy Act then in force.

The foregoing cases relating to the rights of an author before publication show the principle upon which it is determined whether or not a work has been published, and it appears from them that where an author has so dealt with his work that a condition is to be implied that any person into whose hands it may have come is only to use it in a particular way, whether for the benefit of himself or of the author, there will be no publication. So, on the other hand, where the author of a design permitted another to whom the design was shown in confidence to solicit orders for its sale, in order to see whether it was likely to please the public, it was held that the design had been published (u). artistic

It is probable that a picture being exhibited at a public exhibition would amount to publication, though, upon the principles previously explained, such conditions might be annexed to the exhibition as to negative the inference of publication (w). No general rule can be laid down for determining when publication has taken place: the question in each case is whether the proper inference to be drawn from all the circumstances is that the author intended to make his work public.

CHAPTER III.

LITERARY COPYRIGHT BY STATUTE.

AFTER publication, Literary Copyright is regulated by the Statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. The preamble states that "it is expedient to amend the Law relating to Copyright, and to afford greater encouragement to the production of Literary Works of lasting benefit to the world." It is, therefore, necessary to see in what works copyright may be acquired.

In the first place, it is impossible to acquire copyright in works which are of a nature injurious to the public (a), such as a libel so gross as to affect public morals (b), or a work of an indecent (c) or blasphemous character (d).

Moreover, there must be originality in the work. "It must be a composition of the author; something which has grown up in his mind; the product of something which if it were applied to patent rights would be called invention" (e). Thus there is (except in a very exceptional case) no copyright in the title to a book or newspaper (f).

But it is not necessary that the subject matter should be new if the treatment is original (g). There may, therefore, be copyright in such works as a map, directory, or calendar (h), although the materials are equally at the disposal of any other author; in additions and alterations made to the work of another (i); in the head-notes to law reports, but not in the verbatim reports of the judgments (k); in a telegraphic code (l); in a collection of public documents, in the arrangement and abridgment of which mental labour has been bestowed (m); and in the headings to advertisements (n).

In the case of time tables, where the compilers have merely to go to the railway book and copy the tables, a substantial appropriation by one party of the independent labour of the other must be shown in order to justify proceedings for infringement of copyright. But where part of such a book consisted of lists of circular tours, involving considerable labour in the compilation, although this formed a very small portion of the whole book, it was held that it was an independent work and entitled to protection (o).

Similarly, catalogues in the compilation of which skill has been used have been protected; and it is now clear law that this protection extends to cases where the catalogue is a mere advertisement and not used for purposes of sale (p), though in one case this was differently decided (q).

New Editions.—The same principle applies to new editions of former works where they contain alterations or additions. Thus, where the first edition of a work was published before, and several editions were published after, the Act, it was held that, in so far as they contained new matter, the subsequent editions required registration to entitle the owner to sue for an infringement (r). But there is no copyright in a new edition which is simply a reprint of a former edition (s).

News.—Although there is no copyright in news, there may be copyright in the mode in which news is expressed (t).

Apparently, there may be copyright in "tape prices" of stocks and shares on the Stock Exchange (u).

But there cannot be copyright in an idea or an opinion. Thus, where the plaintiff published a registered weekly periodical in which he inserted a list of the horses he selected as likely to win races during the following week, and the defendant daily published a sheet containing (among others) the plaintiff's selections, it was held that, whatever might be the case as to his periodical, the plaintiff had no copyright in the name of the horse selected by him: in fact, that it was an attempt to copyright an opinion (v).

(v) Chilton v. Progress Printing and Publishing Co. [1895], 2 Ch. 29.

Many of the cases on infringement will also be found to exemplify the principle that originality is necessary in order to entitle a work to copyright.

Books.—Section 2 (w) of the Act defines “a book” as meaning “every volume, part, or division of a volume, pamphlet, sheet of letterpress, sheet of music, map, chart, or plan, separately published.”

The previous Statutes did not define the term “book,” but it was held that a single sheet of music was a book within the Statute of Anne (x), and that a single piece of music, though printed in a volume with other compositions, was a book within 54 George III. c. 56 (y).

Under the Act of 1842 there have been several decisions upon this Section.

Thus, an album for holding photographs, and ornamented with views of seven castles, was held to be neither a “literary work” within the preamble, nor a “book” within Section 2 of the Act (z); and a similar decision was given with reference to a card on the face of a barometer (a). On the other hand, an advertisement sheet in the shape of a hand, which opened, and contained on one side a design, and on the other some verses, was held to be a book (b). So, also, a cardboard puzzle so made as to throw a shadow resembling a picture (c), and a cardboard pattern of the outer side of a lady’s sleeve (d);

though a similar case was differently decided in America (e).

The character of what is published must be looked at. If it is not separately published, and if it conveys no information except as a portion of some tool or apparatus, it may be the subject of patent rights but not of copyright (f).

At one time it was considered that there could be no copyright in an advertisement consisting of an illustrated guide of furniture, and containing engravings of designs of furniture (g), but this decision was subsequently overruled (h). Similarly a newspaper was originally held not to be a book (i), but this view was decided to be erroneous (k).

An illustration which is contained in a book is protected (l).

Maps are within the actual words of the definition, and this is so whether they form part of a book or not; whereas before the Statute they had been included among artistic works, and not books (m).

There may be copyright in part of a work (n); and to multiply copies of a material portion of a work which is entitled to copyright is as much a breach of the law, though differing in degree, as to multiply copies of the whole work (o). The opinion, therefore, which was expressed by Lord St. Leonards in Jefferies v. Boosey (p) cannot be considered as law.

Who may Acquire Copyright—Copyright may be acquired by any person residing within the British dominions in any work first published by him in the United Kingdom while so resident (q). There was a difference of opinion in the House of Lords as to whether the protection extended to the work of any author, wherever resident, if first published in the United Kingdom, and the point was not necessary for decision; but it is submitted that the opinion of Lord Cairns, L. C., and Lord Westbury, who gave the Statute this extended interpretation, is correct (r).

Previously it was held, upon the construction of the Statute of Anne, that a foreigner residing abroad could not acquire copyright within the United Kingdom by first publishing his work there (s); but, as was pointed out by the Lord Chancellor in Routledge v. Low, the decision in the earlier case depended mainly on the preamble of the Statute of Anne, and the scope of legislation at that period; whereas different considerations in both respects apply to the later Statute. It may be added that before Jefferies v. Boosey (t), which was decided in 1854, opinions on this point had been equally divided—two cases having been decided for (u), and two against the foreigner's right to protection (w).

In a case in which the author in England of a story published in parts registered the first number in England, and subsequently by his authority the completed serial was published in America before being published in England, the Court, while declining to finally decide the point, were inclined to the opinion that the English author had not lost his copyright (x).

Copyright is defined by Section 2 to mean "the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is herein applied." It is to be observed that the words "or otherwise multiplying" were not contained in the earlier Statutes of 8 Anne c. 19, and 54 Geo. III. c. 56, which only gave protection against multiplication by printing, whereas the protection now extends to multiplication of copies by other means: e.g. lithography (y). It has also been held that although Section 15, which deals with infringement, is confined to printing, a proprietor of copyright is entitled to restrain the multiplication of copies of his work by means other than printing (z).

By Section 3, in the case of books published in an author's lifetime, copyright is to subsist for his life and a further term of seven years, or for forty-two years from the date of first publication, whichever term be the longer; in the case of books published after the death of the author, the term is forty-two years from the date of first publication.

Sections 4 to 12 do not require detailed explanation. They contain provisions against suppression of books of importance to the public (a), for delivery of copies to the British Museum (b) and to other libraries (c), for penalties on default of delivery (d), for the keeping of a Book of Registry at the Stationers' Hall for the entry of the proprietorship of copyright in books, and of assignments and licences, together with regulations concerning the inspection of such book, and the admission in evidence of certified copies of the entries (e); and it is enacted that to wilfully make a false entry or produce in evidence a false copy is to be a misdemeanour (f).

Registration.—Section 13 deals with registration; and the Schedule to the Act contains the form in which registration is to be made (g).

By this Section it is provided that the time of first publication, the name and place of abode of the publisher, and the name and place of abode of the proprietor of the copyright must be registered.

The main points to be observed are the following:—

1. Publication must precede registration, because the entry must relate to a published work (h); and the first publication must take place within the United Kingdom (i).

(i) Routledge v. Low, 3 E. & I. App. 100.

2. The name and place of abode of the first publisher must be entered. An entry of the firm's name will suffice (k).
3. Not only the year (l), but also the day and month (m) of the first publication must be entered.
4. The name and abode of the actual proprietor of the copyright at the date of publication must be entered; but it is not necessary to state how the copyright devolved upon him, nor who was the first proprietor (n). Where an advertisement sheet contained on one side a design, and on the other some verses, it was held sufficient to register the proprietor without also registering the writer of the verses or the artist (o).
5. The title of the book must be registered. Thus, where an illustrated catalogue of shop-fittings was registered as "Illustrated Book of Shop-fittings," and that nowhere appeared as the title on the book, whereas the title "Illustrated Catalogue and Price List" did appear, and had on a previous occasion been registered, it was held that the registration was bad, inasmuch as the book had a title which was not registered (p). An opinion was expressed that, if a book had no title, registration of a description of the book might be sufficient.

If the work registered amounts merely to a reproduction of a former edition, the date of first publication of the earlier edition must be registered (q); but if the subsequent edition contains new matter, registration of the date of first publication of that edition will be good as to the new matter (r). Until registration no proceedings for infringement can be taken by the proprietor of copyright (s); but registration is merely a condition precedent of the right to sue, and does not confer copyright, which arises from publication irrespective of registration (t). It follows that a proprietor of copyright may, after registration, sue for an infringement which took place before registration, and it is notorious that large publishers do not register until just on the eve of taking some proceedings (u), and a writ may be issued on the same day on which the entry is made, provided the entry is made before the writ is issued (w).

A prospective publication cannot be registered (x).

Assignment.—By the same (Thirteenth) Section it is provided that a registered proprietor of copyright may assign his interest therein, by entering such assignment in the Book of Registry in the form prescribed by the Schedule.

Such assignment must be in writing, and a written prevails over a prior verbal assignment (y).

An agreement may amount to an assignment of copyright, if it gives an exclusive power of printing, reprinting, and publishing a work, but where there is an agreement to the effect that the publishers, so long as they perform certain conditions, shall have the right of printing and publishing a book, the copyright is not thereby assigned (z). Such an agreement is a personal one between author and publishers, and the latter cannot pass it on to assignees of their business (z).

In a case before 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, where there was an agreement between the author of a work and the plaintiffs, who were publishers, that the latter should publish 2500 copies of the work, but there was no assignment of copyright, it was held that the plaintiffs were equitable assignees of the copyright in the 2500 copies, and entitled to restrain the defendants from infringing this copyright (a).

Upon an assignment of copyright, unless the contrary is agreed, the assignor may retain and sell all copies which he had printed prior to the assignment (b), but he is not entitled to restrain his assignee from selling other copies till he has disposed of all the copies in his possession (c).

The assignment must be registered in order to entitle the assignee to sue, and it seems that any defect in registration will be fatal (d).

A licence must also be in writing; but if a verbal licence is given it is possible that a Court of Equity would restrain the person giving the licence from derogating from his grant (e). Where the proprietor of copyright in a book of designs licensed another person to print from certain of the blocks, it was held that this was no assignment of copyright, and did not entitle the licensee to permit a third person to print from the blocks (f).

Person Aggrieved.—By Section 14 (g) any person who shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under colour of the Act may apply in manner directed by the Section to have the entry expunged or varied.

A “person aggrieved must have some substantial objection going to the merits of the registered proprietor’s title, and must show that the entry is inconsistent with some right that he sets up in himself or in some other person, or that the entry would really interfere with some intended action on the part of the person making the application” (h).

Again, “to induce the Court to exercise its jurisdiction under this Section it must be satisfied that there is something unfair in the entry, by reason of misconduct on the part of the person who made it, or of some right in the applicant which has been injuriously affected thereby” (i).

The term “person aggrieved” was considered by Parke, B., in Chappell v. Purday (j), to apply only to those whose title conflicts with that of the person registered. A “person aggrieved” may be the person who has himself made the entry (k).

The order to expunge will only be made where the case is a clear one. The application must be made by motion, and will not be granted as an auxiliary remedy unless it is asked for in the pleadings (l). Generally, an issue will be directed to be tried, or by consent it will be ordered that at the trial of the action the entry shall not be used to the prejudice of the person who has applied (m).

There seems to be no appeal from the order of a Judge expunging an entry from the Registry (n).

Infringement.—Infringement of copyright, which is dealt with by Section 15, takes place in two ways.

In the first place, where there is an unauthorised sale, importation, &c., of the identical work in which there is subsisting copyright. In such cases the piracy is clear, and no difficulty arises.

Secondly, where a man, by appropriating the fruits of a previous author's literary labour, publishes a book which is, in effect, a copy of that author's work, and so infringes his sole right to the multiplication of copies.

These cases often present considerable difficulties, arising chiefly from the fact that, inasmuch as there is no copyright in ideas, different authors are at liberty to write books on the same subject, and to consult the same sources of information, so that the results will in all probability not be dissimilar. The real question in each case will be whether a man has made an unfair use of a work in which there is subsisting copyright, or has, by independent labour, produced what may be treated as an original work.

It has been seen that there may be copyright in a dictionary, a book of roads, a map, a directory, and other similar works, in which it is obvious that the sources of information are common, and must be open to any person. When two authors are writing on a subject of this kind in which the sources of information are common, the later author must go to these sources and not merely copy the work of the earlier author (o); but he may use the work of the latter as a guide to those sources, or to verify his own calculations and results when obtained (p).

Intention Immaterial.—It is immaterial that there may have been no intention to infringe another's copyright. Where, therefore, a considerable part of an author's work has been appropriated by another, who has bestowed no independent labour on the matter, an injunction will be granted, although there was no dishonest intention, and although a full acknowledgment be made of the original. The result must be looked at, and if it is clear that the effect of the appropriation will be to injure the sale of the original, it will be restrained (q). So also where the author of a drama, "Gold," founded a novel upon the drama, and introduced much of the original dialogue, and the defendant, who had never seen the original drama, dramatised the novel, thereby introducing into his drama much of what was contained in the original drama, it was held that he had infringed the plaintiff's copyright in such drama (r). It seems clear from the words of the Statute which gives to the owner of copyright "the exclusive right of multiplying copies," that there may be infringement, although there is no intention to infringe.

It is likewise immaterial that the infringing work may have only been distributed among a limited number of persons, and not for sale (s).

(o) Pike v. Nicholas, L. R., 5 Ch. 251; Spiers v. Brown, 6 W. R. 352; Jarrold v. Houlston, 3 K. & J. 708.

(s) Ager v. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co., 26 Ch. D. 637; Novello v. Sudlow, 12 C. B. 177.

But if two authors should produce independently books which were extraordinarily similar, it seems probable that the later work would not be an infringement of the earlier; each person would seem to be properly described as the author of his work, and entitled to copyright in it, and therefore each might perhaps be able to sue a third person who multiplied copies of either work (t).

If the infringement is of a very trivial character no injunction will be granted (u); but "to multiply copies of a material portion of a work which is entitled to copyright is as much a breach of the law, though differing in degree, as to multiply copies of the whole work" (w). And if it is clear that there has been an infringement it is not necessary to wait till all the infringing portions of the work have been ascertained before granting an injunction (x).

Quotation.—A certain amount of quotation is legitimate if fairly used, and it is to be expected by authors that their works will be subjected to criticism (y); but a man cannot, under pretence of quotation, publish the whole or part of another man's work (z).

Although quotation is sometimes permissible, the publisher of a newspaper or magazine is not entitled to set up a practice or custom amongst publishers of such works to borrow from one another (a).

Abridgments.—The law as to abridgments is a little uncertain, and the question in each case seems to be whether the work is so far original as to amount to an independent production, or whether it is, in substance, a copy of the original work. Thus it was laid down in an early case (b) that a real and fair abridgment is not an infringement, but secus if the abridgment is merely colourable. And in a later case (c) Knight-Bruce, V.-C., seems to have been inclined to limit the right to abridge, although he admits that if an abridgment involves a new mental operation, and so is not merely colourable, it may be permissible. So, in the case of music, it is said that although an abridgment may be an original work, yet if a substantial part of the melody is taken from an air contained in an opera, this will constitute an infringement of the copyright in the opera (d).

Translations.—The question of translations does not seem to have arisen, but on principle a translation in England of an English copyright work would be piracy. It is believed that this question has very recently been otherwise decided in the Indian Courts, in a case in which Reuter's Telegrams were translated into the native language. It will be seen later (e) that provisions are contained in Statutes dealing with International Copyright which protect an author from piracy by translation of his works, and it is obvious that an author can rarely be injured by translation of his work in his own country, because it is unlikely that there could be any demand for such a translation.

In considering whether there has been an infringement it is necessary to look not only at the quantity but also at the value of the matter pirated (f), and when it is impossible to separate the matter pirated from the original matter the infringer must suffer (g).

Where you find the same errors in the work of the defendant and the plaintiff, it is strong evidence of piracy (h): indeed, where piracy is suspected, it is a common practice for the proprietor of the copyright to print certain errors in his book in order to see if they will be copied (i).

It has been seen that where a book is made up of letterpress and designs, it will be the subject of copyright, although there may be no copyright in the letterpress. It follows that to copy the designs will be piracy (k). If, however, the purpose of one book is entirely distinct from that of the other, it will not always be piracy to copy a picture or design (l).

Representation.—The representation upon the stage of a piece does not constitute an infringement of the copyright in a book (m); and a man may recite a poem or dramatise a play, or make any other use he pleases of a book, provided he does not “multiply copies by printing or otherwise.” But where the defendant dramatised the plaintiff’s novel and made copies of the play, it was held that the making of these copies, although for gratuitous distribution, constituted an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright in the book (n).

Importation.—Section 15 sets out certain acts which amount to infringement (o), and it is to be noted that importation of a work in which there is copyright is piracy, though not done knowingly; also, that an injunction may be granted though there is no evidence that more than one pirated copy is in existence (p).

Notice of Objections.—By Section 16 (q) of the Act it is enacted that, in an action for piracy, the defendant, on pleading thereto, must give notice in writing to the plaintiff of the objections on which he intends to rely, and will not be permitted to raise any not specified in the notice.

This notice may be given by setting out the objections in the statement of defence, and if so given no additional notice in writing is necessary (r).

It is possible that if the plaintiff's title appears to be defective from his own statement of claim, it may not be necessary for the defendant to give notice of his objections (s), and, similarly, if it appears from the plaintiff's own evidence that his title is defective. But this is a very doubtful point (t), and the proper course is always to give notice of the objections, either in the statement of defence or by a contemporaneous written notice.

Section 17 (u) deals with the offence of importing a book in which there is copyright, originally printed in the United Kingdom, and reprinted elsewhere.

Serial Publications.—Section 18 deals with serial publications, encyclopædias, and similar works, and provides, in substance, that where the publisher of such a work employs and pays persons to write articles or portions of the work, on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to the publisher, the latter is to have the same term of copyright in such articles &c. as is given to authors of books, with the exception that after twenty-eight years the right of publishing the articles separately is to revert to the author, and the publisher is at no time to publish the article separately without the author's consent.

Under this Section it has been held that actual payment, and not a mere contract to pay, must be proved in order to give the publisher copyright (v), and it was held insufficient for the proprietor of a periodical to show that he paid his editor a salary and that the latter procured articles to be written for the magazine (w), though probably if it had been proved that the editor paid the authors, he would have been considered the agent of the proprietor to make such payments.

The provision contained in the Section that the right to publish articles in a separate form is to revert to the author does not apply to articles in an encyclopædia (x).

(u) See p. 123, post.

(v) Richardson v. Gilbert, 1 Sim., N. S. 336.

(w) Brown v. Cooke, 16 L. J., Ch. 142; cf. also Stubbs v. Howard, 11 Times L. R. 507.

(x) See the wording of the Section, p. 123; Hereford v. Griffin, 16 Sim. at p. 104.

The question whether an article has been composed on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to the proprietor often gives rise to difficulty. Thus, where an article was composed by the plaintiff for an encyclopædia, and nothing was said about the copyright, but the proprietors alleged that there was a custom that the copyright in articles so composed should belong to them, it was held that they had not satisfied the requirements of the Statute, and that the plaintiff had not parted with his copyright (y).

So, in Walter v. Howe (z), the Court refused to draw the inference that a memoir of Lord Beaconsfield, written for The Times, and paid for, had been composed on the terms that the copyright should belong to the plaintiff.

On the other hand, in Sweet v. Benning (a), it was held that the proprietors of The Jurist had copyright in the reports of cases furnished to them by barristers, although no arrangement was made with reference to such copyright. It is said that where an author is paid for his contribution to a periodical, the proper inference to be drawn, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, is that the copyright is to belong to the proprietor of the periodical. This view seems to have been adopted in the very recent case of Lamb v. Evans (b).

The right of the author of an article composed for a serial to restrain the publication of the article in a separate form by the proprietor of the serial is a right independent of and distinct from copyright, and may therefore be enforced by the author without registration of his article (c).

An article is separately published when it is published apart from the other articles which were included in the number containing the original publication (d).

The author of a series of stories, who has not parted with the copyright in them to those who have employed and paid him, may proceed against another for publishing one of his stories in a separate form, although he himself has not separately published it (e).

The copyright of the author in a serial story seems to date from the publication of the first number; and where an author of such a story in England registered the first number, and the serial was by his authority subsequently completely published in America before being so published in England, the Court, though declining to directly decide the point, were inclined to the opinion that the author had not lost his copyright (f).

The law on this somewhat complicated subject may therefore be summed up as follows:—

If the proprietor of a magazine &c. has employed and paid an author for a literary contribution on the terms that the copyright therein is to belong to the employer—

1. The copyright in the magazine &c. containing such contribution belongs to the employer for the term of literary copyright.
2. For twenty-eight years neither employer nor author is entitled to publish the contribution in a separate form, and the author, without having registered his article, can restrain his employer from so publishing.
3. After twenty-eight years the author has the sole right of publishing his article in a separate form, except in the case of contributions to an encyclopædia.

4. If the author has not been paid, or has by agreement reserved the copyright in his contribution, he has the right of separate publication during the term of literary copyright.

Registration of Periodical Works.—Section 19 deals with the registration of periodical works, and provides that the proprietor of copyright must register—

1. The title of the work.
2. The time of the first publication of the first number.
3. The name and place of abode of the proprietor, and of the publisher, if the proprietor and publisher are different persons.

Sections 20, 21, and 22 may be more appropriately dealt with in connection with the drama and music.

By Section 23 all copies of books in which there is copyright, and which have been duly entered, which are printed or imported without the written consent of the registered proprietor of the copyright, are to be deemed to be his property.

Where, however, the proprietor is not duly registered, although the copies will not become his property within this Section, there is inherent jurisdiction in the Court to order all such copies to be delivered up for destruction, as having been created in violation of the rights of the proprietor (g).

Registered proprietors of a copyright take as tenants in common, not as joint tenants (h), but any one or more of such proprietors may maintain an action against a stranger for infringement of the entire copyright (i).

(g) Hole v. Bradbury, 12 Ch. D. 886; cf. Prince Albert v. Strange, 1 McN. & G. 25, and Kelly v. Hodge, 1 Seton [4th ed.] 244.

(h) Powell v. Head, 12 Ch. D. 686.

Section 24 provides that no proceedings for infringement are to be commenced before registration (k).

By Section 25 copyright is to be deemed personal property (l).

By Section 26 any action must be brought within twelve months after the offence has been committed. This probably only applies to proceedings under the Act and not to applications for an injunction.

“ Full costs ” within this Section means party and party costs (m), and these are not “ other than usual costs ” within 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, s. 2 (n).

The copyrights vested in the various Universities specified in Section 27 are left untouched by the Act, but these are few and unimportant (o).

By Section 29 the Act is made to extend to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to every part of the British Dominions.

Article X. of Sir Fitzjames Stephen’s “ Digest ” states : “ It is said that Her Majesty and her successors have the right of granting, by patent, from time to time to their printers an exclusive right to print the text of the Authorised Version of the Bible, of the Book of Common Prayer, and possibly the text of Acts of Parliament.” Whether this is so or not is somewhat doubtful, and the question does not seem to be one of practical importance. It is treated (as is every branch of the Law of Copyright) with great elaboration by Mr. Copinger in Chapter IX. of his book.

CHAPTER IV.

DRAMATIC COPYRIGHT.

“DRAMATIC COPYRIGHT” is a term which may be used in two senses, between which it is necessary to distinguish.

1. Literary Copyright in a Drama. This is governed by the same considerations as those applying to copyright in books (a), and the same conditions must be complied with.
2. Right of Representation, which is conveniently termed “Playright” by several authors.

This latter right is governed by the Statutes 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 15, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 20 to 24.

Common Law Playright.—Whether Playright existed at Common Law, and apart from the Statute of William IV., is a difficult question upon which different views are entertained. It was decided that the representation on the stage of a piece which had been printed and published was not publication within the Statute of Anne (b); and it may fairly be inferred from the case of Warne v. Seebohn (c) that such representation is not a “multiplication of copies of a book by printing or otherwise” within the Statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. It has not, however, been directly decided that the author of a dramatic piece has not playright at Common Law, but it is submitted that this is so for reasons similar to those suggested in the case of literary copyright. It is to be observed that before publication an author has a right to his manuscript, and thus, in the case of Macklin v. Richardson (d), it was held that where the plaintiff had composed a drama which he had not printed or published, but had permitted to be several times performed upon the stage, and the defendant sent a shorthand writer to one of these performances, and from his notes published the first act of the drama, the plaintiff's right to his manuscript was infringed. In the case of an unpublished dramatic piece it would seem most improbable that piracy could be committed by any person who had not obtained possession of and so infringed the author's right to his manuscript.

(a) Cf. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, ss. 20 to 22.

(b) Coleman v. Wathen, 5 T. R. 245.

(c) 39 Ch. D. 73.

In the case of a published dramatic piece the plaintiff's admissions in Cumberland v. Planché (e) seem to show that no playright existed at Common Law, and this view is somewhat confirmed by the decision in Murray v. Elliston (f), where it was held that the representation on the stage of one of Lord Byron's dramas was no infringement of the plaintiff's copyright; but the judgment is very short, and the play was abridged before being represented, so that this authority is not satisfactory.

On the other hand, in Morris v. Kelly (g), an injunction was granted against the defendant, who advertised his intention of performing a piece the copyright in which belonged to the plaintiff, but here again the facts are not fully reported, and the judgment merely grants the injunction.

(f) 5 B. & Ald. 657.

(e) 1 Ad. & E., at p. 582.

(g) 1 Jac. & W. 481.

The question, however, is not one of practical importance, more especially since the recent decision in the case of Warne v. Seebohn (h). In that case the defendant dramatised a novel "Little Lord Fauntleroy," the copyright in which belonged to the plaintiffs.

Four copies of the play had been taken, and on comparing these with the novel it appeared that considerable portions of the latter had been copied almost verbatim. The plaintiffs contended that these copies were an infringement of the copyright, although they admitted that the representation of the play was not; and it was held in accordance with this contention that the copyright had been infringed.

Thus, as in the case of an unpublished drama it is almost impossible that piracy can take place without a defendant surreptitiously obtaining possession of the author's manuscript, so in the case of a published drama piracy seems equally impossible without copies of the drama being used. Moreover, by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 12, a copy of every play produced must be sent to the Lord Chamberlain.

Statutory Playright.—By the Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 15 (which recites that "it is expedient to extend the provisions of 54 Geo. III, c. 56"), it is enacted (Section 1)—

1. That in the case of a dramatic piece not printed or published the author shall have, as his own property, the sole liberty of representing it at any place of dramatic entertainment within certain limits.
2. That in the case of a dramatic piece printed and published within ten years before the passing of the Act, or thereafter printed and published, the author is to have a similar right for twenty-eight years, or the residue of his natural life, from the date of the passing of the Act, or the date of publication respectively.

By this Act, therefore, the author of an unpublished dramatic piece has playwright in perpetuity.

But by Section 20 of 5 & 6 Vict. (i), which recites that it is expedient to extend the term of the sole liberty of representing dramatic pieces given by the Act of Will. IV. to the full term given by the Act of 1842, it is enacted that the playwright of any dramatic piece shall be the property of the author for the same term as that of copyright in a book.

The effect of this enactment is not to extend but to cut down the term in the case of an unpublished dramatic piece—a result which may be desirable, but is not consistent with the preamble to the Section.

The right given by Section 1 of the Act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 15, is the sole liberty of representing or causing to be represented at any place or places of dramatic entertainment within certain territorial limits any dramatic piece or entertainment composed by the author. &c.

Place of Dramatic Entertainment.—It has not been found easy to define what is a place of dramatic entertainment, but it is clear that it need not be a place habitually so used (j).

On the other hand, the performance must have something of a public character (k). Thus, where a dramatic piece was represented in the board-room of Guy's Hospital for the entertainment only of the nurses, attendants, and persons connected with the hospital, who were all admitted gratis, it was held that the plaintiff's playright was not infringed, because the performance was rather of a domestic than a public character. The fact that no charge was made for admission is an important element in the consideration of such a case, though by no means conclusive, because the injury which the author may suffer has chiefly to be regarded, and this might obviously be equally great where a representation of his piece was given without any charge for admission (l).

(i) Post, p. 125.

(j) Russell v. Smith, 12 Q. B. 217.

(k) Duck v. Bates, 12 Q. B. D. 79; 13 Q. B. D. 843.

Author.—Protection is given by Section 1 of the Statute of William IV. to the "author" of a dramatic piece and his assignee.

The term "author" is well defined by Sir John Leach, in a case (m) which arose under the Statute of Anne, as follows:—"The person who forms the plan and who embarks in the speculation of a work, and who employs various persons to compose different parts of it adapted to their peculiar requirements—he, the person who so forms the plan and scheme of the work, and pays different artists of his own selection, who, upon certain conditions, contribute to it, is the author and proprietor of the work."

Thus, where the defendant, who adapted one of Shakespeare's plays to the stage, and generally designed the whole representation, dresses, scenery, &c., employed the plaintiff to compose music for the representation on the terms that the music should become part of the piece, and that the defendant should have the sole liberty of (l) Duck v. Bates, supra. It is to be observed that in the case of music it is not necessary that the representation should have been given at a place of dramatic entertainment in order to entitle a plaintiff to recover the penalty (see Wall v. Taylor, 11 Q. B. D. 102; post, p. 57).

(m) Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 Sim. & St. 1.

performing the music as part of the piece. it was held that the music was a mere accessory to the dramatic composition, and that the playright was in the defendant (n).

On the other hand, where the plaintiffs employed a writer to adapt a French play for them—they to have the sole right of representation in England and he in the country—it was laid down that, inasmuch as the employers had merely suggested the subject, and had no share in the design or execution of the work, the whole of which, so far as any character of originality belonged to it, flowed from the mind of the person employed, the employers did not become proprietors of the playright (o). So also, where the plaintiff employed the defendant to write a play for him, and after it was written the plaintiff altered it considerably, it was held that this did not constitute him a joint author with the defendant, the play not having been written with a “preconcerted joint design” (p).

Dramatic Piece.—There is also difficulty in defining the term “dramatic piece.” In Russell v. Smith (q) it was held that a song “The Ship on Fire,” which had for its subject the burning of a ship and the escape to another ship, was a dramatic piece, although sung without scenery or costume. On the other hand, in Fuller v. The Blackpool Winter Gardens (r), it was held by two Judges of the Court of Appeal that a song “Daisy Bell,” which was intended to be sung in appropriate costume on the music hall stage, was a mere song and not a dramatic piece.

(r) [1895] 2 Q. B. 429.

In each case it must be a question of fact for the jury, and depends upon the character of the composition—e.g. whether it is of a dramatic as distinguished from a narrative character. Although a song may be a dramatic piece it is also a musical composition, to which therefore the Musical Copyright Act of 1882 applies (s).

Assignment.—It is obvious that both copyright and play-right in a dramatic piece must belong to the author of the piece before any assignment by him; and it was held, under the Statute of William IV., that an assignment of the copyright carried with it the playwright (t).

To meet this decision Section 22 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 was probably framed, which provides that assignment of copyright in a dramatic piece is not to carry with it the playwright (u).

The assignment need not be by deed or in any particular form (w).

It need not be witnessed (x). It must, however, be in writing (y), so that even if the facts seem to show an agreement by a composer that his work should be represented by another, the composer will be entitled to recover penalties for such representation, unless this is evidenced by writing (z).

(z) Eaton v. Lake, supra.

A licence to perform a piece may be given, which does not amount to an assignment. In such a case the licensor must sue for penalties for infringement of playright (a).

The "consent in writing" required by Section 2 of 3 & 4 William IV. c. 15 may be given by an agent of the author (b).

One part-owner of the playright in a piece cannot grant to a third person the right to represent such piece without the consent of the other part-owner (c).

Dramatisation of Novel.—It seems to be clear law that to dramatise a novel or other literary work is no infringement of literary copyright, whether within the Statute of Anne (d), or within the later Statute (e). Conversely, where the plaintiff wrote a play and a novel founded on the same subject, and containing many identical passages, and the defendant, who had never seen the play, dramatised the novel and copied considerable portions of it, he was held to have infringed the plaintiff's playright (f). It was considered that, although the defendant had only copied directly from the novel, he had indirectly copied from the drama, and that he could not be said to be the "author" of his drama.

On the other hand, where plaintiff and defendant each independently composed a drama, which turned out to be extraordinarily similar, the plaintiff's being composed later but represented earlier than the defendant's, and neither having in fact copied from the work of the other, it was held that the defendant by representing his drama had not infringed the plaintiff's playright, and probably, therefore, that each was entitled to playright in his work for the statutory term (g).

But where the author of a novel himself dramatised it, but had not printed and published his drama, and the defendant, not having seen the drama, independently dramatised the novel, and produced an entirely different drama to that of the original author, it was held that he had not infringed the other's playright (h).

The law, therefore, on this branch of the subject may, perhaps, be summarised as follows:—

1. The author of an unpublished dramatic piece has the sole right to perform it; and any person who represents a play copied from it infringes the author's playright, and probably his right to the manuscript.
2. The author of a dramatic piece which he has printed and published has the sole right of performance; and any person representing a copy of the piece infringes the author's playright, and (if any copies of the infringing play have been made) his copyright.
3. Any person may dramatise another's novel; and where an author dramatises his own novel, his playright will not be infringed by another who dramatises the same novel, but produces an entirely different play.

In Article 14 of the Digest of the Law of Copyright, which was prepared by the late Mr. Justice Stephen for the Copyright Commission of 1878, it is stated that if a piece of music or a dramatic piece is published as a book before being performed or represented, the playright is lost. This view has been decided to be erroneous (i).

(g) Reichardt v. Sapte [1893], 2 Q. B. 308.

(h) Toole v. Young, L. R., 9 Q. B. 523.

Infringement.—By Section 2 of 3 Will. IV. c. 15, play-right is infringed whenever any person represents or causes to be represented, without the consent in writing of the author or proprietor, at any place of dramatic entertainment within certain limits, “any such production as aforesaid, or any part thereof.”

It is not necessary to show that the right has been knowingly infringed (k).

To constitute infringement a material portion must have been copied (l).

Where a person let the use of his theatre, together with the company of actors, lights, scenery, &c., to his son for a night, and received payment from his son, it was held that he had caused the piece to be represented (m). On the other hand, where a defendant let the use of his theatre to another, together with the accessories, and that other person provided the company and selected the pieces to be represented, sharing the profits with the defendant, it was held that the defendant had not caused the pieces to be represented (n).

In Roberts v. Bignell (o) an action for penalties was brought against the proprietor of a theatre and the accompanist and singer, and it is stated that judgment was entered for the plaintiff, but, inasmuch as the composition was held to be a dramatic piece, and not a musical composition, presumably judgment was only entered against the proprietor of the theatre.

As has previously been pointed out in the case of books, so in the case of musical and dramatic pieces, a person will be restrained from attempting to pass off his work as that of another (p).

By Section 20 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 the earlier provisions of that Act with respect to the property and registration of copyright are to apply to the playwright of any dramatic piece or musical composition.

First representation or performance of such piece is to be equivalent to the first publication of a book.

Where such piece is in manuscript it is sufficient for the owner of the playwright to register the title, the name, the place of abode of the author or composer, the name and place of abode of the proprietor, and the time and place of the first representation or performance.

Registration.—By Section 21 the proprietor of copyright is to have all the remedies provided by the earlier Act (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 15).

There is, however, an important distinction between Copyright and Playright in the matter of registration:—The Act of William IV. contains no provision as to registration; while Section 11 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 provides that “the proprietorship in the copyright of books and in dramatic and musical pieces may be registered.”

By Section 20 the provisions thereinbefore enacted in respect of the property of copyright, and registering the same, are made applicable to musical and dramatic pieces; but the provisions thereinafter enacted are not so made applicable.

(p) Chappell v. Sheard, 2 K. & J. 117; Chappell v. Davidson, 2 K. & J. 123.

By Section 24 the owner of copyright in a book must be registered in order to be entitled to sue; but no mention is made of musical and dramatic pieces, and the proviso to the Section seems to except these.

It follows, and it has so been held (q), that Section 24, being a later provision than Section 20, does not apply to musical and dramatic pieces, and that the proprietors of playright in such pieces may sue without being registered.

This result seems to a great extent to nullify the provisions as to registration of dramatic pieces contained in Section 20 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, but it is a result which seems to be contemplated by the proviso to Section 24 of that Act. The anomaly is commented on in Article 11 of the Report of the Commission of 1878, but no steps have at present been taken to remedy it.

If proceedings are taken for the infringement of copyright in a musical or dramatic piece treated as a book, and not for infringement of playright, the plaintiff must, no doubt, be registered in order to entitle him to sue.

The Court refused to restrain the performance in Germany of an English dramatic work (r).

By Section 2 of the Act of William IV., in case of infringement of playright, the plaintiff is to recover not less than forty shillings for each infringing representation, or the full amount of benefit or advantage arising from such representation, or the injury or loss sustained by the plaintiff therefrom, together with double costs. But now the right to double costs is taken away, and the plaintiff is entitled to full and reasonable indemnity for costs (s).

In any proceedings under this Section the plaintiff is entitled to administer interrogatories (t).

Any action for infringement must be brought within twelve calendar months after the offence has been committed. This applies to proceedings under the Act, and probably not to actions for an injunction.

The proprietor of playright has also the same rights as the proprietor of copyright in cases of infringement (u).

CHAPTER V.

MUSICAL COPYRIGHT.

Most of the considerations applying to Dramatic Copyright (both copyright and playwright) are applicable to Musical Compositions. It seems, however, more convenient to treat music separately, because there are Statutes dealing specially with it, and because the Dramatic Copyright Act of William IV. does not apply to it.

From an early date a piece of music was held to be a "book or other writing" within the Statute of Anne (a), even if printed on only a single sheet (b), and although not printed separately, but together with a number of other pieces (c); and, by the words of Section 2 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, the term "book" includes a "sheet of music."

The arrangement of the music of an opera for the pianoforte alone is an original work requiring registration (d). But the proprietor of copyright in an opera possesses such right in every part of it, and if an air is pirated from the opera, although for the purpose of dance music, this constitutes an infringement (e).

The same considerations must be applied to determine the question who is the author of a musical composition as in the case of dramatic pieces; and it has been held that a man may be the author although he has not composed every part of the work: e.g. where a man composed a prelude and words to a piece of music, and got another to write an accompaniment, the former was held entitled to copyright in the whole work (f). As has been stated, the Act of William IV. did not apply to musical compositions, but the benefits of that Act were extended so as to apply to them by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 20. This Section is retrospective, and therefore gave to the author of a musical composition composed within ten years before 1842 the sole right of performance (g).

(a) Bach v. Longman, 2 Cowp. 623.

(b) Clementi v. Goulding, 11 East 244.

(c) White v. Geroch, 2 B. & Ald. 298.

But musical playwright, unlike dramatic playwright, may be infringed although the performance does not take place at a place of dramatic entertainment (h). Unless, however, the performance partakes of a public as opposed to a domestic character, it will not be an infringement (i).

A song may be a dramatic piece as well as a song, and in such a case the owner of the playwright must comply with The Musical Copyright Act, 1882.

It is evident that, as with dramatic so with musical compositions, the copyright and playwright may be vested either in the same or different persons. In the case of dramatic pieces, the co-existence of the two rights does not give rise to much difficulty; but in the case of music a system of blackmailing was devised, by which owners of musical playwright used to send emissaries over the country to find out cases in which this playwright had been infringed by persons singing the songs in ignorance that they were infringing any right, and penalties were then exacted from such persons (j). To meet this system of oppression the Act of 1882 (k) was passed, and was not more fortunate in its wording than most of the Acts relating to Copyright.

Act of 1882.—Section 1 provides that the owner of copyright in any musical composition first published after the passing of the Act, who wishes to retain the sole right of performance, must cause a notice that such right is reserved to be printed on the title page of every published copy of the composition (l).

By Section 2—

1. Where before publication of any copy the copyright and right of performance become vested in different owners, the owner of the latter right shall, if he wishes to retain it, give to the owner of the copyright notice in writing requiring him to print upon every copy a notice that the right of performance is reserved.
2. If after publication of copies the two rights become vested in different owners, and if the notice aforesaid has been duly printed until that time on each copy, the owner of the right of performance is to give notice to the owner of copyright to print such notice on every copy thereafter published.

By Section 3, the owner of copyright, if he fail to comply with the above provision, is to pay to the owner of the right of performance twenty pounds.

(j) See per Smith, L. J., in Fuller v. The Blackpool Winter Gardens [1895], 2 Q. B. 429.

(k) 45 & 46 Vict. c. 40, post, p. 163.

(l) Smith, L. J., also points out that the Act does not say what is to happen if this provision is not complied with (Fuller v. The Blackpool &c. Gardens, supra).

Act of 1888.—In the year 1888 a further Act was passed (m), providing, by Section 1, that the amount of the penalty or damages to be awarded for the unauthorised performance of a musical composition was to be in the discretion of the Judge, who might award a less sum than forty shillings.

By Section 2, the Judge has an absolute discretion as to costs.

By Section 3, the proprietor of the place where the unauthorised representation took place is not to be liable to a penalty or damages, unless he permitted the representation to take place with knowledge that it was unauthorised (n).

By Section 4, the Act is not to apply to proceedings in respect of the representation of an opera.

Registration.—As regards registration, Section 20 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 applies. The proprietor of copyright in a musical composition regarded as a literary work must comply with the rules as to registration of books.

The proprietor of the sole right of performance must register—

1. The title.
2. The name and place of abode of the author or composer.
3. The name and place of abode of the proprietor (o).
4. The time and place of the first representation or performance.

(m) 51 & 52 Vict. c. 17, post, p. 177.

(n) Post, p. 178.

(o) Where the proprietor had no place of abode in England at the date of registration, it was held sufficient to register the address of the publishers, that being a place at which the proprietor could be communicated with (Lover v. Davidson, 1 C. B., N. S. 182; cf. Nottage v. Jackson, 11 Q. B. D. 627).

But as regards the right to take proceedings for infringement of the performing right, apparently the same distinction (previously observed in the case of dramatic pieces) also prevails between music and books: viz., the above registration is not necessary to entitle the proprietor to sue.

The performance of a musical composition is the same as the representation of a dramatic piece (p), so that the principles laid down in the cases referred to under the head of "Dramatic Copyright" upon the question whether a defendant has "caused a piece to be represented" are equally applicable to the performance of musical compositions (q). But, as has been seen, it is now provided, by Section 3 of 51 & 52 Vict. c. 17, that in the case of musical compositions the proprietor, tenant, or occupier of any place where an unauthorised performance takes place is not to be liable to any penalty or damages, unless he wilfully causes or permits the performance knowing it to be unauthorised.

A man will be restrained from so describing and attempting to pass off a musical composition as to deceive the public into thinking that it is the musical composition of another. It has been laid down that there are four characteristics of a song which would be calculated so to mislead: (1) the name of the song; (2) of the singer; (3) of the composer; (4) of the publisher (r).

CHAPTER VI.

ENGRAVINGS.

COPYRIGHT IN ENGRAVINGS is governed by the Acts 8 Geo. II. c. 13, 7 Geo. III. c. 38, 17 Geo. III. c. 57, and 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 59, commonly known as "the Hogarth Acts"; and the protection is extended to Lithographs by 15 & 16 Viet. c. 12.

The first of these Acts gives protection for fourteen years to every person who shall invent, design, engrave, &c., or from his own work and invention shall cause to be designed, engraved, &c., any historical or other prints.

The Act 7 Geo. III. c. 38 extends the protection to—

1. Every person who invents, designs, &c., or from his own work, design, or invention, causes to be designed, engraved, &c., any historical print or prints of any portrait, conversation, landscape, or architecture, map, chart, or plan, or any print whatsoever (a).
2. To every person who engraves, &c., or causes to be engraved, &c., any prints taken from any picture, drawing, model, or sculpture, as if such prints had been graved or drawn from the original design of such person.
3. The term of protection is extended to twenty-eight years.

(a) This is perhaps merely an amplification and not an extension of the earlier Act.

These two Acts provide that penalties are to be recovered for infringements.

The Act 17 Geo. III. c. 57 provides that damages may be recovered by an action on the case.

The three Statutes must be read together.

Print.—“A print” therefore comprises “any historical print or any print of any portrait, conversation, landscape, or architecture, map, chart, or plan, or any other print whatsoever” (b), whether made from a person’s own design or invention, or “taken from any picture, drawing, model, or sculpture, either ancient or modern” (c); and also “prints taken by lithography, or any other mechanical process by which prints or impressions of drawings or designs are multiplied indefinitely” (d).

In order to entitle the proprietor of a print to the remedies provided by the Acts, no registration is required, but the name of the proprietor and date of the first publication of the print must be engraved on each plate, and on every such print (e).

This is not merely directory, as was originally held (f), but is a necessary condition (g). But it is sufficient if the name of the proprietor in fact appears, although he is not described as such (h), and if the proprietor be a trading firm it is sufficient to print such trading name on the engraving, although it does not contain the names of all the partners (i).

A person may be the designer and inventor of a plan within 7 Geo. III. c. 38. though not himself able to execute it.

A bird's-eye view of a locality was held to be a landscape within the above Act (k). But it is doubtful whether this decision is correct, because it has been decided that a map, though originally regarded as an artistic work, must now be registered as a book under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 (l).

Where prints were contained in a book, which also contained letterpress, of which the prints were illustrations, the whole was held to be a book, and the plaintiff, who had not engraved his name and the date of publication on the prints, obtained an injunction restraining the defendant from copying the prints (m).

A licence to use blocks does not carry with it an assignment of copyright (n).

A person may be the proprietor of the right to make an engraving of a certain size from a picture, the owner of the picture retaining the copyright in the picture, and probably the right to license other persons to make engravings of other sizes (o).

To be the subject of copyright a print must be "engraved, etched, drawn, or designed in Great Britain" (p) under the Act 17 Geo. III. c. 57, and although these words are not found in the earlier Acts, it was held that they must be implied (q).

The Statutes define certain acts which constitute infringement of copyright in prints, and prescribe penalties.

It is to be noted that by 8 Geo. II. c. 13 a penalty is only imposed upon those persons who sell infringing copies knowingly.

There is no similar restriction in 17 Geo. III. c. 57. Therefore, under the latter Act, the owner of an infringing copy is liable to damages (though not to penalties), whether he knows that it is an infringement or not (r).

Infringement.—As regards infringement, the main question in this as in other branches of copyright law is whether the defendant's print is substantially a copy of that of the plaintiff (s).

Moreover, the intention of the Acts was to protect the engraver from infringing works of an "engraving character," and although the words "or otherwise copy" in 17 Geo. III. c. 57 are wide enough to include any kind of copying, it has been decided that they must receive some limitation.

Thus it was held to be no infringement of an engraving of "The Huguenots" to publish a pattern for Berlin wool work consisting of the figures in the picture, because the work was of an entirely different character, to be used for an entirely different purpose, and could not injure the reputation of the engraver or the commercial value of his work (t). The test as to whether the alleged copy will compete commercially with the original is not conclusive, but is a very important circumstance to consider (u).

(u) Hanfstaengl v. Empire Palace and Newnes [1894], 3 Ch. 109.

It has likewise been held that where the plaintiff employed the defendant to engrave certain plates (which he did), and some of the first impressions were retained by him, and on his bankruptcy advertised for sale, this was no infringement under the Acts, which apply only to prints struck off from engravings pirated from other engravings, and not to a sale of the original engravings themselves. But the defendant in this case would have been liable, quite apart from the Statutes, upon the breach of an implied obligation to deliver up to the plaintiff all prints struck off for him (w).

It has also been suggested by Willes, J., that single copies made by hand and not capable of being reproduced in large quantities would not constitute an infringement (x). Where the plaintiff employed an artist to engrave prints from two pictures, and the artist engraved the prints and also made two sketches from the pictures, and engraved two prints from the sketches, which the defendant published, this was held to be no infringement, because the defendant's prints were copied from the pictures and not from the plaintiff's prints (y).

On the other hand, to copy a print by means of photography, lithography, or other similar process is piracy. It was suggested that inasmuch as special Statutes had been passed dealing with lithography (z) and photography (a), it followed that lithographs and photographs were not within the protection, and therefore not within the prohibition, of the earlier Statutes. But it was held that the prohibitory clause was much more extensive than the protective clause in the earlier Statutes, and would comprehend copying by processes not known at the time when those Statutes were passed (b).

An action may be maintained by an assignee under 17 Geo. III. c. 57, and it is not necessary to produce in evidence the plate itself, a print taken from the original plate being sufficient (c). It was not decided whether the assignee ought, when he reprints, to print his own name as proprietor or that of the original proprietor.

The limitation of three months prescribed by 8 Geo. II. c. 13, and that of six months prescribed by 7 Geo. III. c. 38, apply only to actions brought for penalties under those Statutes, and not to an action for damages under 17 Geo. III. c. 57 (d).

Penalties are recoverable in accordance with the provisions of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 8 (e).

CHAPTER VII.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, AND PHOTOGRAPHS.

COPYRIGHT in Paintings, Drawings, and Photographs is given by the Act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, which recites that "by Law, as now established, the authors of Paintings, Drawings, and Photographs have no Copyright in such their works."

Section 1 (a) gives to the author, being a British subject or resident within the dominions of the Crown, of every original painting, drawing, and photograph wherever made, and to his assigns, the sole and exclusive right of copying, engraving, reproducing, and multiplying such painting or drawing and the design thereof, or such photograph and the negative thereof, by any means and of any size for the term of the natural life of the author and seven years after his death.

Author of Photograph.—The term "author," as applied to a painting or drawing, occasions no difficulty, but as applied to a photograph it has been the subject of several decisions.

The nearest approach to a definition of the word is to be found in the case of Nottage v. Jackson (b), where it is said that the author of a photograph is the man "who is most nearly the effective cause of the representation when completed." In that case it was decided that where two persons carrying on business as photographers did not personally conduct the business, and one of their employés went some distance from their establishment and took a photograph of a group of cricketers, the employé, and not the employers, was the author of the photograph. On the other hand, where a photographer superintended and had a considerable share in the taking of a photograph, although he did not carry out the entire operation, he was considered to be the author (c).

It is to be observed that the copyright comprises the right of engraving, and of reproducing by any means and of any size.

A painter may therefore assign to another the right to engrave his picture of a certain size, and retain both the copyright in the picture and the right, probably, to engrave it in other sizes, while his assignee will have the copyright in the engraving of that particular size (d).

Design.—The term “design” does not mean “idea,” for there cannot be copyright in an idea, but means “the particular forms and arrangements (whether of lines or colouring) which the copyright author has selected as the vehicle for conveying his idea to those who see his work” (e). So it was held that a card on which was drawn a hand making a voter’s mark with a pencil could not be protected. It was said that if the plaintiff’s card had been copied with mathematical exactitude by the defendant, this might have been piracy in respect of the particular design, but that the idea of making the process of voting simple for the illiterate by a similar design could not be the subject of copyright (f).

(f) Kenrick v. Lawrence, 25 Q. B. D. 99.

Sale of Paintings &c.—By the proviso to Section 1 it is enacted in substance—

1. That if a painting or drawing, or the negative of a photograph, is sold or executed on behalf of any other person for good or valuable consideration, the copyright is not to be retained by the vendor or artist, unless expressly reserved to him in writing signed by the purchaser, or person on whose behalf the work is done, but is to belong to the latter.
2. The vendee (g) is not to be entitled to the copyright, unless there is an agreement in writing to that effect signed by the vendor.

The result of this proviso seems to be that—

1. Upon the sale of a picture or drawing, or the negative of a photograph, the purchaser acquires the copyright if there is an agreement to that effect signed by the vendor, and if there is no agreement signed by the purchaser reserving the copyright to the vendor.
2. If a picture, drawing, or photograph is executed on commission, the copyright is to belong to the person who gives the order, if there is no agreement signed by him reserving the copyright to the artist.

It would seem to follow that upon the sale of such a work, if there is no agreement in writing as to the copyright, it can belong neither to vendor nor purchaser (h).

But in the case of works executed on commission, it is necessary both that there should be good consideration, and that the works should have been executed on behalf of another. In the absence of either of these circumstances the proviso as to the written reservation of the copyright in favour of the artist does not apply, and he is entitled to copyright in his work.

(g) This part of the proviso seems to be confined to the case of the sale of a picture, &c.

Thus, where a photograph was taken without charge, the photographer to be at liberty to sell the photographs, it was held that this constituted good and valuable consideration, but on the other hand that the work was not executed on behalf of the sitter. Therefore the proviso as to reservation of the copyright in writing did not apply, and the photographer was owner of the copyright and entitled to restrain any person (including the sitter) from multiplying copies (i).

By Section 2, it is provided that any person may copy or use any work in which there is no copyright, or may represent any scene or object, notwithstanding that there may be copyright in some representation of such scene or object.

The latter part of this Section illustrates the principle which has been held applicable in the case of books: viz., that different authors may write on the same subject, provided neither copies from the other (k).

Thus, it has been said that if a painter paints pictures to represent such familiar subjects as Love or Courtship, he cannot prevent other artists from treating the same subjects (l).

By Section 3, it is provided that all copyright under the Act is personal property, and every assignment of it or licence to use or copy the design or work is to be in writing (m).

(l) Hanfstaengl v. Baines [1895], App. Cas. 20.

(m) See Strahan v. Graham, 16 L. T., N. S. 87.

It has already been pointed out that a licence to copy a picture—e.g. by engraving it of a certain size—does not amount to an assignment of copyright (n).

Registration.—Registration is dealt with by Section 4, which is, however, most clumsily worded. The first part of the Section provides that a memorandum is to be entered in the Register of every copyright to which any person shall be entitled under the Act; but the provisions for registration laid down in the second portion of the Section seem applicable only where there has been an assignment of copyright. Probably there has been an attempt to deal with both cases in one sentence, and that there must be registered—

1. The name and place of abode of the author of the work.
2. A short description of the nature and subject of the work. It is a question of fact whether a sufficient description has been registered. The name of the work may be sufficient if it be descriptive of the subject (o).
3. A sketch, outline, or photograph of the work if the proprietor of copyright so desires.

Upon an assignment there must in addition be registered—

1. The date of the agreement or assignment.
2. The names of the parties thereto.
3. The name and place of abode of the person in whom the copyright is vested by virtue thereof. If this be a firm, the firm's name will suffice (p).

(n) Ante, p. 63.

(o) Ex parte Beal, L. R., 3 Q. B. 387.

(p) Rock v. Lazarus, L. R., 15 Eq. 105.

No proprietor of copyright is entitled to the benefit of the Act until registration, nor can he recover in respect of anything done before registration. This is otherwise in the case of Literary Copyright (q).

As has been seen under Section 1 of the Act, copyright dates from the time when a picture, drawing, or photograph is executed. It follows that, although not entitled to take proceedings for infringement till after registration, a person is proprietor of the copyright in a picture &c. before registration (r).

And, quite independently of statutory copyright, where the proprietor of a work of art lends or entrusts it to another for a specific purpose—e.g. to make a certain number of copies—he can, upon general principles, restrain that other from using it for any other purpose (s).

It has not been decided, and is a very difficult question, whether the author of a work of art has a Common Law right. In a case before the Statute it was said that an artist had the property in his work as in any other chattel, but that after publication he could not prevent any person from copying it. The question of what amounted to publication of a picture was much discussed; but ultimately it was decided that, whether or not the picture had been published, there had been a breach by the defendant of an implied obligation (t).

It has been seen (u) that in the case of literary works it has been held that there is no Common Law right existing concurrently with the statutory right, and, in analogy with this decision, it would perhaps be held that, inasmuch as (q) Ante, p. 29; cf. Fishburn v. Hollingshead [1891], 2 Ch. at 580.

(r) Tuck & Sons v. Priester, 19 Q. B. D. 620.

(t) Turner v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 121 and 510.

(u) Ante, p. 9.

artistic statutory copyright is given from the date when the work of art is executed, and not from the date of publication, there can be no Common Law right. The point, however, does not seem one of much practical importance, because where an unregistered work of art has been copied the proprietor must generally have a right of action for breach of implied obligation.

Thus it was held that, apart from any question of copyright, a photographer may be restrained from exhibiting or selling copies of a photograph which he has taken of another person as being a breach of implied obligation (x).

A licensee apparently may sue without being registered; and it has been held that where proprietors of copyright in a picture licensed the plaintiff to copy it in chromolithography, and the defendant reproduced the same picture in chromo, having copied it, not from the plaintiff's chromos, but from a sketch of the original picture, the plaintiff was entitled to damages, although his own chromos had not the name of the proprietor and date of publication printed on them in accordance with the Engraving Acts.

The grounds of the decision were—

1. That the plaintiff was not an assignee but a licensee, and that nothing is said about registration of a licensee in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68.
2. The right infringed was a right to copy the original picture in chromo, and the original picture having been registered the plaintiff was entitled to sue.

If the action had been brought by the plaintiff under the Engraving Acts on the ground that the defendant had copied his chromos, he could not have recovered, inasmuch as he had not complied with the requirements of the Acts (y). The case, however, was one of difficulty, and doubts may be entertained as to the correctness of the decision.

(x) Pollard v. Photographic Co., 40 Ch. D. 345; Mayall v. Higby, 6 L. T., N. S. 362; Turner v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 121 and 510.

Section 5 provides that various contracts in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 with relation to keeping the Register Book, making false entries, applications to expunge by persons aggrieved, &c are to apply to the case of works of art.

The decisions, therefore, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, as to who is a person aggrieved (z) apply.

It seems that there is no appeal from the order of a Judge expunging an entry (a).

Penalties.—Section 6 prescribes penalties where—

1. A person who is not the proprietor of copyright in a painting, drawing, or photograph shall, without the consent of the proprietor, repeat, copy, &c., any such work or the design thereof.
2. A person, knowing that such imitation has been unlawfully made, shall import into the United Kingdom, or sell, &c., such imitation of the work or the design thereof.

The penalties are—

1. A sum not exceeding ten pounds for every such offence to be paid to the proprietor of the copyright.
2. All copies and negatives of photographs to be forfeited to such proprietor.

An assignee who has registered is entitled to proceed under this Section, although the original proprietor and subsequent assignees were not registered, because the proprietor of copyright can assign it although unregistered (b). But a registered proprietor can only proceed in respect of unlawful acts done after his registration, and not for acts done while the previous proprietor was registered (c).

A trustee who is registered as the owner may sue as such; but it is impossible for one person to be the owner and another to be on the Register, and for both these persons successfully to sue (d). The Section being penal does not apply where the unlawful copies have been made abroad, and in such case the proprietor must proceed for damages under Section 11 (e). A conviction under the Section is of a criminal nature (f). It is sufficient to produce an engraving of the original picture as evidence (g).

Section 7 prohibits certain fraudulent dealings with paintings, drawings, and photographs, and prescribes penalties for the various offences.

Section 8 prescribes the mode in which penalties are to be recovered under this Act and the Acts relating to engravings.

Section 10 prohibits the importation of copies made contrary to the Act, whether in foreign countries or in the British Dominions, and provides for the detention of such copies by Customs officers.

Section 11 gives the proprietor of copyright an action for damages for infringement in addition to penalties, and the right to the delivery up of infringing copies and negatives of photographs.

Infringement.—Thus Sections 6 and 11 deal with infringements of copyright; and, apart from the special provisions of these Sections, which do not require explanation, it is necessary to inquire generally what constitutes a “copy” so as to amount to an infringement.

Definition of a “Copy.”—The word “copy” has been defined by Bayley, J., as “that which comes so near to the original as to give every person seeing it the idea of the original” (h). It has, however, been pointed out that this definition is too wide because there is no copyright in an idea; and it is not piracy to represent the idea conveyed by a work of art if the representation is not conveyed by a vehicle similar to that of the original (i).

Thus, where the plaintiff was the proprietor of certain pictures representing such subjects as Love and Courtship, and the defendants represented on the stage an exact copy of such pictures by means of living pictures, this was held to be no infringement (k), and sketches of such living pictures published in a newspaper were held not to be infringements (l).

Similarly, patterns for Berlin wool work, consisting of figures copied from a picture of which the plaintiff was the copyright owner, were held not to be an infringement (m).

It is necessary to see whether the alleged copy is calculated either to compete commercially with the original or to damage the reputation of the original artist, and if it is clear that neither of these results will be produced there will be no piracy.

(m) Dicks v. Brooks, 15 Ch. D. 22.

On the other hand, a copy may be an infringement, though not taken from the original, but from a sketch made of the original (n).

Section 12 incorporates the provisions of the International Copyright Act (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12), which is dealt with in a subsequent Chapter.

CHAPTER VIII.

SCULPTURE.

THE Act 38 Geo. III. c. 71 was the first Statute giving Copyright in Sculpture. This Act has since been repealed by 54 Geo. III. c. 56, which is the Statute at present in force on this question. The earlier Act was said by Lord Ellenborough to have apparently "been framed with a view to defeat its own object" (a).

The later Act (b) does not require to be dealt with in detail, and there have been very few decisions upon it.

Under Section 1, which defines the subject matter of the copyright, it has been held that casts of fruits and leaves were casts of "a subject being matter of invention in sculpture" (c).

The right dates from publication, which has been defined to be "the moment the eye of the public is allowed to rest on it"—e.g. when placed in public squares, or apparently when exhibited in public exhibitions (d); and it seems probable that the date which, under Section 1, is to be put, together with the name of the proprietor, on every sculpture must be the date of publication.

(c) Caproni v. Alberti [1891], W. N. 200.

(d) Turner v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 510, 516.

There is, therefore, a distinction in this respect between paintings and sculptures.

The only further matter to be observed under this head is that the provisions relating to sculpture contained in 13 & 14 Vict. c. 104, ss. 6 and 7, have been repealed by 46 & 47 Vict. c. 57, ss. 60 and 113, as to all sculptures made after that Act came into force.

CHAPTER IX

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

THERE was no protection originally given by English law to the work of foreign authors residing abroad, even if such works were first published in England (a). After the passing of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, there was a difference of opinion in the House of Lords, in the celebrated case of Routledge v. Low (b), as to whether the foreign author (resident abroad) of a work first published in England could acquire British copyright, and the only point actually decided was that such copyright could be acquired by an alien friend residing in part of the British Dominions if the work were first published in England.

In the year 1844 an International Copyright Act (c) was passed, which repealed an earlier Act (d) having relation only to books. The Act provided that Her Majesty might, by Order in Council, direct that authors of books and works of art first published in foreign countries (to be named in the Order) should have copyright therein within Her Majesty's dominions for certain periods, and upon compliance with certain conditions specified in the Order.

It was held, under Section 19 of this Act, that, where it

(c) 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, amended by 15 Vict. c. 12, and 38 Vict. c. 12.

(d) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 59.

was impossible for an author to obtain the benefit of the Act, owing to no treaty existing between the United States and England, if a play were first published in New York no copyright could be acquired here (e).

It was also held that the proprietor of a foreign print could not acquire British copyright without complying with the provisions of 8 Geo. II. c. 13 (f); but it seems very doubtful whether this decision is correct, because it has recently been held (g) that the Act of 1844 supersedes the Act of 1842 as to registration, and by parity of reasoning would in the same way supersede 8 Geo. II. c. 13.

It was found that a great many Orders in Council were issued under the Act, and that great difference of practice prevailed in the various countries to which the Orders applied (h). To obviate these inconveniences, a conference of the Powers was held at Berne, resulting in the Berne Convention, which was agreed to on the 5th of September, 1887.

Meanwhile, in anticipation of this Convention, the Act of 1886 was passed (i), which enabled Her Majesty to issue Orders in Council confirming the Convention; and an Order in Council was so issued on the 28th of November, 1887, to come into operation on the 6th of December, 1887.

The Act of 1886, the Berne Convention, and the Order in Council must accordingly be read together (k).

The rights of foreign authors in the British Dominions rest upon the Order in Council made under the Act of 1886, and sanctioning the Berne Convention; the rights of English authors in the foreign countries of the Union rest upon the Berne Convention, together with any legislation which has been found necessary in any particular country to give effect to that Convention, similar to the English Act of 1886 (l).

The countries comprised in the Union are the British Empire, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Tunis, Hayti, Luxembourg, Monaco, and Montenegro.

Under the provisions of the above-mentioned enactments the author (m) of any literary or artistic work (n) first produced in one of the foreign countries of the Union is to have the same right of copyright throughout her Majesty's dominions as if the work had been first produced in the United Kingdom (o).

The expression "produced" must be construed as the case requires (p), and will be construed so as to give effect to the Berne Convention (q).

Works both published and unpublished are protected (r). The enjoyment of the right is subject to the accomplishment of the conditions prescribed by law in the country of origin, and the term is that prescribed by such law (s).

Country of Origin.—The country of origin (t) is—

1. In the case of an unpublished work, that to which the author belongs.
2. In that of a published work, that in which the work is first produced.
3. In that of a work published simultaneously in several countries of the Union, that in which the term prescribed by law is the shortest.

A work published in one of the countries belonging to the Union, but the author of which does not belong to such a country, is equally protected (u); but the publisher and not the author is to take proceedings, and is to be deemed to be entitled to the copyright (w). The foreign author is not to have any greater right or longer term than is enjoyed by him in the country of origin of the work (x).

Registration.—The author must comply with all the formalities required in the country of origin. As regards registration and delivery of copies of works the provisions of the International Copyright Acts are not to apply unless specified in the Order (y). The Order adopting the Convention contains no requirements as to registration or delivery of copies. It is, therefore, unnecessary for the foreign author to register or deliver copies in the United Kingdom; he acquires copyright throughout the British Dominions provided that he has satisfied all formalities prescribed by the country of origin of his work (z).

The author and publisher of a work first produced before 6th December, 1887, in one of these foreign countries—such work not having fallen into the public domain in the country of origin (a)—is to be entitled to the same protection as if the International Copyright Acts and the Order in Council had applied to such foreign country at the time when such work was produced (b).

The word “interest” means something different from “right” (c). It must be a “direct subsisting pecuniary interest in the continuation of the production” (d).

Extent of Right.—The copyright extends through the whole of the British Dominions (e). Proof of the existence of copyright in a work produced in one of the foreign countries is to be by an extract from a Register, or by a certificate or other document duly authenticated (f). But, by Article 11 of the Convention, it is sufficient if the name of the author be indicated on the work in the accustomed way, though the tribunals may, if necessary, require production of a certificate from the competent authority to the effect that the formalities prescribed in the country of origin have been complied with (g).

This provision applies to all works entitled to copyright produced before 6th December, 1887 (h), and not merely to works produced between the passing of the Act of 1886 and 6th December, 1887, as seems to have been suggested (i).

But where any person has lawfully produced a work in the United Kingdom before 6th December, 1887, the above Section is not to diminish or prejudice any rights or interests arising from such production which are subsisting and valuable at the said date (k). In other words if a man has, in the United Kingdom, produced a work without infringing any copyright the Order in Council is not to give to any foreign author rights which would affect injuriously any rights or interests attaching to such production.

In the case of anonymous or pseudonymous works the publisher is entitled to represent the author (l).

Translations.—Authors are protected against the production in or importation into the United Kingdom (which includes all British Possessions, by 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, s. 9) of translations of their works (m). But this right is to cease if, after ten years from the end of the year in which a work has been produced, no authorised translation in the English language of such work has been produced. In the case of a book published in numbers, the ten years run—according to the Act of 1886, from the end of the year when each number was produced; according to the Convention, from the end of the year when the last number was produced (n).

A translation within the meaning of this provision must be a translation of the whole work, and substantially accurate; and the mere fact that the author sanctions a certain translation will not make it such a translation as the Acts contemplate (o).

If an authorised translation is produced within ten years it is protected in the same manner as an original work (p).

There is possibly a distinction between the rights as regards translation of foreign authors in England and British authors abroad (q); but this seems very doubtful.

The rights of the British author in foreign countries are similar to those of the foreigner in British Possessions—i.e. he must comply with the formalities prescribed by English law, and will obtain copyright for the term prescribed by the country of origin of the work. Where the copyright of a British author is infringed in one of the foreign countries he must seek redress in the Courts of that country (r).

The only difference seems to be that, in respect of translations, the author may have less extensive rights abroad than the foreigner has here, if the view indicated by Mr. Scrutton is correct.

Articles from newspapers or periodicals may be reproduced in any country of the Union, whether in the original or a translation, unless the authors or publishers have expressly forbidden their reproduction; but no such prohibition can extend to political articles or to comments on current topics (s).

Pirated works may be seized on importation into any of the countries where the original is protected, the seizure to be regulated by the domestic laws of each State (t). But if the infringing copies were printed in the country where the original work was first published, the prohibition against importation does not apply (u).

Adaptations of Dramatic Pieces.—As regards dramatic pieces, Section 6 of 15 Vict. c. 12 is not to apply (x). That Section provided that fair adaptations to the English stage of dramatic pieces or musical compositions published abroad were not to be prevented by the Act.

By 38 Vict. c. 12, s. 1, it was enacted that the above Section might be made inapplicable by Orders in Council which gave protection to translations of dramatic pieces first represented abroad.

The Order of November, 1887, does give such protection, and Section 6 of 15 Vict. c. 12 is therefore excluded under the provisions of Section 1 of 38 Vict. c. 12.

The result seems to be that the author of a dramatic piece first published in one of the foreign countries is protected against the adaptation of his piece to the English stage; but presumably this protection will cease to exist if the author does not comply with the requirements as to translations previously dealt with (y).

Countries not in the Union.—Austria and Hungary have a separate Convention similar to the Berne Convention, and applying to the United Kingdom and all the Colonies, except India, Canada, the Cape, New South Wales, and Tasmania (z).

Other countries may, under certain circumstances, be admitted to the Berne Convention (a).

As regards countries which are not named in any Order in Council the International Copyright Acts will be inapplicable, and the ordinary law will apply. It is probable, however, that British copyright can be acquired in a work first published here, although the author be a native of one of those countries and resident there (b).

United States.—The United States stands in a somewhat different position. Until the year 1891 there was no international copyright treaty with that country. In that year an Act (c) was passed to amend Title 60, Chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to Copyright, and to come into force on the 1st of July, 1891.

The Act is only to apply to a citizen of a foreign State when such State permits to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens, or when such State is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, and to which agreement the United States may, at its pleasure, become a party (d). The existence of either of these conditions is to be determined by the President of the United States, by proclamation made from time to time.

The Act applies to (among other nations) Great Britain and the British Possessions.

The effect of the Act is substantially as follows:—An English author may secure copyright in the United States for twenty-eight years, and for an additional fourteen years in certain events (e), in any literary or artistic work: provided that—

1. On or before the day of first publication he delivers to the Librarian of Congress a printed copy of the title of the literary work, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, photograph, or chromo, or a description of the painting, drawing, statuary, &c. (f).
2. Not later than the day of first publication he delivers to the Librarian of Congress two copies of such literary work, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, &c.; or in the case of a painting, &c., a photograph of the same. And in the case of a book, photograph, chromo, or lithograph, the two copies must be printed within the limits of the United States (g).

Upon complying with these conditions the English author is protected against infringement in the United States, and every infringing copy of a book is to be forfeited to the proprietor of the copyright (h).

The English author is likewise protected against importation of pirated copies into the United States, subject to a few unimportant exceptions (i). A copy of every subsequent edition of a book in which substantial alterations are made is to be delivered to the Librarian of Congress (k).

If, therefore, an English author wishes to acquire both British and American copyright he must publish simultaneously in the United Kingdom and the United States.

If an American author desires to obtain British copyright he must publish simultaneously in the two countries, and must comply with the formalities prescribed by English law in respect of his publication here.

It is not quite certain whether a dramatic or musical composition must (like a book) be printed in the United States in order to obtain copyright there, but probably that is not necessary (l).

It is important to observe that, whereas by English law the representation of a dramatic piece upon the stage is "publication" (m), the contrary has been held in America (n).

In order, therefore, for an American dramatic piece to become the subject of British copyright, it must be printed or performed in the United Kingdom contemporaneously with its production in the United States.

Mr. Scrutton (o) points out that in the case of paintings the work must, in order to obtain copyright under the Act of 1862, be by a British subject or a person resident within the dominions of the Crown: the effect of which is that an American painting &c. cannot receive the benefit of copyright here, whereas similar English works of art do receive protection in America.

CHAPTER X.

COLONIAL COPYRIGHT.

COLONIAL COPYRIGHT is fully dealt with in the Report of the Copyright Commission of 1878 (a).

Although a Colonial author who first published his work in the United Kingdom was (like an English author) entitled to copyright throughout the British Possessions (b), if the work were first published in the Colony of which he was a native he could only obtain copyright in accordance with the law (if any) of such Colony. Moreover, works which were the subject of copyright in the United Kingdom could not be imported into the Colonies (c). Shortly after the passing of the Act of 1842 urgent representations were made by the North American Provinces in favour of admitting into those Colonies cheap reprints of English works made in the United States, between whom and the United Kingdom there was at that time no international copyright treaty.

The result of the representations of the Colonies, and especially of Canada, was the passing, in the year 1847, of the Foreign Reprints Act (d), the object of which was to suspend the restrictions against the importation of foreign reprints into such Colonies as, in the opinion of Her Majesty, had made due legislative provision for securing reasonable protection within their jurisdiction to British authors. The Canadian Legislature provided that Twelve-and-a-half per cent. should be paid for the benefit of the authors interested in all American reprints of English copyright works, the amount to be collected by the Canadian and paid over to the British Government. Other Colonies made similar provisions, and were admitted to the benefit of the Act; but it was found that the duty collected was so absurdly small, owing to various difficulties, that the Act proved a complete failure, at any rate as regards English authors.

Complaints arose both on the part of the English and of the Canadians, and ultimately in 1875 the Canadian Dominion passed an Act, which was sanctioned by an Imperial Act of the same year, and which provided that any person domiciled in Canada or any part of the British Possessions, or being a citizen of any country having an international copyright treaty with the United Kingdom, might obtain copyright in Canada for twenty-eight years for any literary or artistic work by printing or reprinting, producing or reproducing such work in Canada. This copyright was to be in addition to and concurrent with the copyright possessed by such authors through the British Dominions under the Imperial Act.

This Act has not proved thoroughly satisfactory; and, as is well known, proposals for a new Act are now under discussion.

Thus, up to the present time, Canada has played the most prominent part in the Colonial Copyright question. But, as regards the Colonies generally, it has been seen that under the recent Act of 1888 literary and artistic works produced in the Colonies are to enjoy the benefit of the English Copyright Acts, as if such works had been first produced in the United Kingdom (e).

These works are also entitled to copyright in the countries which are parties to the Berne Convention (f), and works produced in these countries are likewise entitled to copyright in the Colonies.

But, by an Order in Council made under the Act of 1888 in respect to a foreign country, Her Majesty may exclude any Colonies named from the benefit of the Act. If not expressly excluded they are included (g). As has been pointed out (h), this power of exclusion has in certain cases been exercised.

The United States has, by proclamation of the President, admitted the British Possessions to the benefits of the Act of 1891 (i), and Colonial authors must, of course, comply with the conditions there prescribed.

Registration of Colonial Works.—As regards the registration of Colonial works, it is enacted that where the law of the Colony provides for registration those provisions, and not the regulations contained in the Act of 1886, are to be complied with (k); that a duly certified extract from the Colonial Register shall be admissible as evidence of the contents without further proof (l); and that in the case of a book no delivery of copies is required in the United Kingdom (m).

Importation.—It is pointed out by Mr. Scrutton that, in view of the Customs Act of 1876, it is safer for an English proprietor of copyright to give notice in writing to the Customs Commissioners that such copyright exists, in order to prevent unauthorised importations into the Colonies (n). But there can be little doubt that apart from such notice the importation can be restrained (o).

8 Geo. II.

WHEREAS an Act of Parliament passed in the Eighth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Second. intituled, "An Act for the Encouragement of the Arts of Designing, Engraving, and Etching Historical and other Prints, by vesting the Properties thereof in the Inventors and Engravers during the time therein mentioned," has been found ineffectual for the purposes thereby intended: Be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the First day of January, One thousand seven hundred and sixty-seven, all and every person and persons who shall invent or design, engrave, etch, or work in mezzotinto or chiaro oscuro, or, from his own work, design, or invention, shall cause or procure to be designed, engraved, etched, or worked in mezzotinto or chiaro oscuro, any historical print or prints, or any print or prints of any portrait, conversation, landscape, or architecture, map, chart, or plan, or any other print or prints whatsoever, shall have, and are hereby declared to have, the benefit and protection of the said Act, and this Act, under the restrictions and limitations hereinafter mentioned.

And be it enacted that if any person shall wilfully make or cause to be made any false entry in the Registry Book of the Stationers' Company, or shall wilfully produce or cause to be tendered in evidence any paper falsely purporting to be a copy of any entry in the said Book, he shall be guilty of an indictable misdemeanour, and shall be punished accordingly.

13. And be it enacted that after the passing of this Act it shall be lawful for the proprietor of copyright in any book heretofore published, or in any book hereafter to be published, to make entry in the Registry Book of the Stationers' Company of the title of such book, the time of the first publication thereof, the name and place of abode of the publisher thereof, and the name and place of abode of the proprietor of the copyright of the said book, or of any portion of such copyright, in the form in that behalf given in the Schedule to this Act annexed, upon payment of the sum of Five Shillings to the officer of the said Company; and that it shall be lawful for every such registered proprietor to assign his interest, or any portion of his interest therein, by making entry in the said Book of Registry of such assignment, and of the name and place of abode of the assignee thereof, in the form given in that behalf in the said Schedule, on payment of the like sum; and such assignment so entered shall be effectual in law to all intents and purposes whatsoever, without being subject to any stamp or duty, and shall be of the same force and effect as if such assignment had been made by deed.

14. And be it enacted that if any person shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under colour of this Act in the said Book of Registry, it shall be lawful for such person to apply by motion to the Court of Queen's Bench, Court of Common Pleas, or Court of Exchequer, in term time, or to apply by summons to any Judge of either of such Courts in vacation, for an Order that such entry may be expunged or varied; and that upon any such application by motion or summons to either of the said Courts, or to a Judge as aforesaid, such Court or Judge shall make such Order for expunging, varying, or confirming such entry, either with or without costs, as to such Court or Judge shall seem just; and the officer appointed by the Stationers' Company for the purposes of this Act shall, on the production to him of any such Order for expunging or varying any such entry, expunge or vary the same according to the requisitions of such Order.

Persons aggrieved by any entry in the Book of Registry may apply to a Court of Law in term, or Judge in vacation, who may order such entry to be varied or expunged.

15. And be it enacted that if any person shall, in any part of the British Dominions, after the passing of this Act, print or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright, without the consent in writing of the proprietor thereof, or shall import for sale or hire any such book so having been unlawfully printed from parts beyond the sea, or knowing such book to have been so unlawfully printed or imported, shall sell, publish, or expose to sale or hire, or cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, or shall have in his possession, for sale or hire, any such book so unlawfully printed or imported, without such consent as aforesaid, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright, to be brought in any Court of Record in that part of the British Dominions in which the offence shall be committed: Provided always, that in Scotland such offender shall be liable to an action in the

And be it enacted that after the passing of this Act in any action brought within the British Dominions against any person for printing any such book for sale, hire, or exportation, or for importing, selling, publishing, or exposing to sale or hire, or causing to be imported, sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, any such book, the defendant, on pleading thereto, shall give to the plaintiff a notice in writing of any objections on which he means to rely on the trial of such action; and if the nature of his defence be that the plaintiff in such action was not the author or first publisher of the book in which he shall by such action claim copyright, or is not the proprietor of the copyright therein, or that some other person than the plaintiff was the author or first publisher of such book, or is the proprietor of the copyright therein, then the defendant shall specify in such notice the name of the person who he alleges to have been the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, together with the title of such book, and the time when and the place where such book was first published, otherwise the defendant in such action shall not at the trial or hearing of such action be allowed to give any evidence that the plaintiff in such action was not the author or first publisher of the book in which he claims such copyright as aforesaid, or that he was not the proprietor of the copyright therein; and at such trial or hearing no other objection shall be allowed to be made on behalf of such defendant than the objections stated in such notice, or that any other person was the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, than the person specified in such notice, or give in evidence in support of his defence any other book than one substantially corresponding in title, time, and place of publication with the title, time, and place specified in such notice.

17. And be it enacted that after the passing of this Act it shall not be lawful for any person, not being the proprietor of the copyright, or some person authorised by him, to import into any part of the United Kingdom, or into any other part of the British Dominions, for sale or hire, any printed book first composed or written or printed and published in any part of the said United Kingdom wherein there shall be copyright, and reprinted in any country or place whatsoever out of the British Dominions; and if any person, not being such proprietor or person authorised as aforesaid, shall import or bring, or cause to be imported or brought for sale or hire, any such printed book into any part of the British Dominions, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this Act, or shall knowingly sell, publish, or expose to sale or let to hire, or have in his possession for sale or hire any such book, then every such book shall be forfeited, and shall be seized by any officer of customs or excise, and the same shall be destroyed by such officer; and every person so offending, being duly convicted thereof before two Justices of the Peace for the county or place in which such book shall be found, shall also for every such offence forfeit the sum of Ten Pounds, and double the value of every copy of such book which he shall so import or cause to be imported into any part of the British Dominions, or shall knowingly sell, publish, or expose to sale or let to hire, or shall cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale, or let to hire, or shall have in his possession for sale or hire, contrary to the true intent and meaning of this Act, Five Pounds to the use of such officer of customs or excise, and the remainder of the penalty to the use of the proprietor of the copyright in such book.

Copyright. [10th May, 1844.

(7 VICTORIA, CHAPTER 12.)

WHEREAS by an Act passed in the Session of Parliament held in the First and Second Years of the Reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for securing to Authors in certain cases the Benefit of International Copyright" (and which Act is hereinafter, for the sake of perspicuity, designated as "the International Copyright Act"), Her Majesty was empowered by Order in Council to direct that the authors of books which should after a future time, to be specified in such Order in Council (a), be published in any Foreign Country, to be specified in such Order in Council, and their executors, administrators, and assigns, should have the sole liberty of printing and reprinting such books within the British Dominions for such term as Her Majesty should by such Order in Council direct, not exceeding the term which authors, being British subjects, were then (that is to say) at the time of passing the said Act, entitled to in respect of books first published in the United Kingdom; and the said Act contains divers enactments securing to authors and their representatives the copyright in the books to which any such Order in Council should extend: And whereas an Act was passed in the Session of Parliament held in the Fifth and Sixth Years of the Reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act to Amend the Law of Copyright" (and which Act is hereinafter, for the sake of perspicuity, designated as "the Copyright Amendment Act"), repealing various Acts therein mentioned relating to the copyright of printed books, and extending, defining, and securing to authors and their representatives the copyright of books: And whereas an Act was passed in the Session of Parliament held in the Third and Fourth Years of the Reign of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act to Amend the Laws relating to Dramatic Literary Property" (and which Act is hereinafter, for the sake of perspicuity, designated as "the Dramatic Literary Property Act"), whereby the sole liberty of representing or causing to be represented any dramatic piece in any place of dramatic entertainment in any part of the British Dominions, which should be composed and not printed or published by the author thereof or his assignee, was secured to such author or his assignee; and by the said Act it was enacted that the author of any such production which should thereafter be printed and published, or his assignee, should have the like sole liberty of representation until the end of Twenty-eight Years from the first publication thereof: And whereas by the said Copyright Amendment Act, the provisions of the said Dramatic Literary Property Act and of the said Copyright Amendment Act were made applicable to musical compositions; and it was thereby also enacted that the sole liberty of representing or performing, or causing or permitting to be represented or performed, in any part of the British Dominions, any dramatic piece or musical composition should endure and be the property of the author thereof and his assigns for the term in the said Copyright Amendment Act provided for the duration of the copyright in books, and that the provisions therein enacted in respect of the property of such copyright should apply to the liberty of representing or performing any dramatic piece or musical composition: And whereas under or by virtue of the four several Acts next hereinafter mentioned (that is to say,) an Act passed in the Eighth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Second, intituled "An Act for the Encouragement of the Arts of Designing, Engraving, and Etching Historical and other Prints, by vesting the properties thereof in the Inventors or Engravers during the time therein mentioned"; an Act passed in the Seventh Year of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to amend and render more effectual an Act made in the Eighth Year of the Reign of King George the Second, for Encouragement of the Arts of Designing, Engraving, and

Etching Historical and other Prints"; an Act passed in the Seventeenth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for more effectually securing the Property of Prints to Inventors and Engravers, by enabling them to sue for and recover Penalties in certain cases"; and an Act passed in the Session of Parliament held in the Sixth and Seventh Years of the Reign of His late Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act to extend the Protection of Copyright in Prints and Engravings to Ireland" (and which said four several Acts are hereinafter, for the sake of perspicuity, designated as the Engraving Copyright Acts); every person who invents or designs, engraves, etches, or works in mezzotinto or chiaro oscuro, or from his own work, design, or invention causes or procures to be designed, engraved, etched, or worked in mezzotinto or chiaro oscuro any historical print or prints, or any print or prints of any portrait, conversation, landscape, or architecture, map, chart, or plan, or any other print or prints whatsoever, and every person who engraves, etches, or works in mezzotinto or chiaro oscuro, or causes to be engraved, etched, or worked, any print taken from any picture, drawing, model, or sculpture either ancient or modern, notwithstanding such print shall not have been graven or drawn from the original design of such graver, etcher, or draughtsman, is entitled to the copyright of such print for the term of Twenty-eight Years from the first publishing thereof; and by the said several Engraving Copyright Acts it is provided that the name of the proprietor shall be truly engraved on each plate, and printed on every such print, and remedies are provided for the infringement of such copyright: And whereas under and by virtue of an Act passed in the Thirty-eighth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for encouraging the Art of making new Models and Casts of Busts and other things therein mentioned," and of an Act passed in the Fifty-fourth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act to amend and render more effectual an Act of His present Majesty, for encouraging the Art of making new Models and Casts of Busts and other things therein mentioned, and for giving the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that the said recited Act herein designated as the International Copyright Act shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

Repeal of International Copyright Act.

2. And be it enacted that it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by any Order of Her Majesty in Council, to direct that, as respects all or any particular class or classes of the following works, (namely) books, prints, articles of sculpture, and other works of art, to be defined in such Order, which shall after a future time, to be specified in such Order, be first published in any foreign country to be named in such Order, the authors, inventors, designers, engravers, and makers thereof respectively, their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, shall have the privilege of copyright therein during such period or respective periods as shall be defined in such Order, not exceeding, however, as to any of the above-mentioned works, the term of copyright which authors, inventors, designers, engravers, and makers of the like works respectively first published in the United Kingdom may be then entitled to under the hereinbefore recited Acts respectively, or under any Acts which may hereafter be passed in that behalf.

Her Majesty, by Order in Council, may direct that authors &c. of works first published in foreign countries shall have copyright therein within Her Majesty's Dominions.

3. An Act to Amend the Law respecting International and Colonial Copyright. [25th June, 1886.]

(49 & 50 VICTORIA, CHAPTER 33.)

WHEREAS by the International Copyright Acts Her Majesty is authorised by Order in Council to direct that as regards literary and artistic works first published in a foreign country the author shall have copyright therein during the period specified in the Order, not exceeding the period during which authors of the like works first published in the United Kingdom have copyright :

And whereas at an International Conference held at Berne in the month of September, One thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, a draft of a Convention was agreed to for giving to authors of literary and artistic works first published in one of the countries parties to the Convention copyright in such works throughout the other countries parties to the Convention :

And whereas, without the authority of Parliament, such Convention cannot be carried into effect in Her Majesty's Dominions and consequently Her Majesty cannot become a party thereto, and it is expedient to enable Her Majesty to accede to the Convention :

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :

1. (1) This Act may be cited as "The International Copyright Act, 1886."

Short titles and construction.

(2) The Acts specified in the First Part of the First Schedule to this Act are in this Act referred to, and may be cited by the short titles in that Schedule mentioned, and those Acts, together with the enactment specified in the Second Part of the said Schedule, are in this Act collectively referred to as the International Copyright Acts.

The Acts specified in the Second Schedule to this Act may be cited by the short titles in that Schedule mentioned, and those Acts are in this Act referred to, and may be cited collectively as the Copyright Acts.

(3) This Act and the International Copyright Acts shall be construed together, and may be cited together as "The International Copyright Acts, 1844 to 1886."

Amendment as to extent and effect of Order under International Copyright Acts.

2. The following provisions shall apply to an Order in Council under the International Copyright Acts:—

(1) The Order may extend to all the several foreign countries named or described therein:

(2) The Order may exclude or limit the rights conferred by the International Copyright Acts in the case of authors who are not subjects or citizens of the foreign countries named or described in that or any other Order, and if the Order contains such limitation and the author of a literary or artistic work first produced in one of those foreign countries is not a British subject, nor a subject or citizen of any of the foreign countries so named or described, the publisher of such work, unless the Order otherwise provides, shall for the purpose of any legal proceedings in the United Kingdom for protecting any copyright in such work be deemed to be entitled to such copyright as if he were the author, but this enactment shall not prejudice the rights of such author and publisher as between themselves:

(3) The International Copyright Acts and an Order made thereunder shall not confer on any person any greater right or longer term of copyright in any work than that enjoyed in the foreign country in which such work was first produced.

Simultaneous publication.

3. (1) An Order in Council under the International Copyright Acts may provide for determining the country in which a literary or artistic work first produced simultaneously in two or more countries is to be deemed, for the purpose of copyright, to have been first produced, and for the purposes of this Section "country" means the United Kingdom and a country to which an Order under the said Acts applies.

(2) Where a work produced simultaneously in the United Kingdom and in some foreign country or countries is, by virtue of an Order in Council under the International Copyright Acts, deemed for the purpose of copyright to be first produced in one of the said foreign countries, and not in the United Kingdom, the copyright in the United Kingdom shall be such only as exists by virtue of production in the said foreign country, and shall not be such as would have been acquired if the work had been first produced in the United Kingdom.

4. (1) When an Order respecting any foreign country is made under the International Copyright Acts the provisions of those Acts with respect to the registry and delivery of copies of works shall not apply to works produced in such country, except so far as provided by the Order.

Modification of certain provisions of International Copyright
Acts.

(2) Before making an Order in Council under the International Copyright Acts in respect of any foreign country, Her Majesty in Council shall be satisfied that that foreign country has made such provisions (if any) as it appears to Her Majesty expedient to require for the protection of authors of works first produced in the United Kingdom.

5. (1) Where a work, being a book or dramatic piece, is first produced in a foreign country to which an Order in Council under the International Copyright Acts applies, the author or publisher, as the case may be, shall, unless otherwise directed by the Order, have the same right of preventing the production in and importation into the United Kingdom of any translation not authorised by him of the said work as he has of preventing the production and importation of the original work.

Restriction
on translation.

(2) Provided that if after the expiration of Ten Years, or any other term prescribed by the Order, next after the end of the year in which the work, or, in the case of a book published in numbers, each number of the book, was first produced, an authorised translation in the English language of such work or number has not been produced, the said right to prevent the production in and importation into the United Kingdom of an unauthorised translation of such work shall cease.

(3) The law relating to copyright, including this Act, shall apply to a lawfully produced translation of a work in like manner as if it were an original work.

(4) Such of the provisions of The International Copyright Act, 1852, relating to translations as are unrepealed by this Act shall apply in like manner as if they were re-enacted in this section.

Application of Act to existing works.

6. Where an Order in Council is made under the International Copyright Acts with respect to any foreign country, the author and publisher of any literary or artistic work first produced before the date at which such Order comes into operation shall be entitled to the same rights and remedies as if the said Acts and this Act and the said Order had applied to the said foreign country at the date of the said production: Provided that where any person has before the date of the publication of an Order in Council lawfully produced any work in the United Kingdom, nothing in this Section shall diminish or prejudice any rights or interests arising from or in connection with such production which are subsisting and valuable at the said date.

copyright.

7. Where it is necessary to prove the existence or proprietorship of the copyright of any work first produced in a foreign country to which an Order in Council under the International Copyright Acts applies, an extract from a register, or a certificate, or other document stating the existence of the copyright, or the person who is the proprietor of such copyright, or is for the purpose of any legal proceedings in the United Kingdom deemed to be entitled to such copyright, if authenticated by the official seal of a Minister of State of the said foreign country, or by the official seal or the signature of a British diplomatic or consular officer acting in such country, shall be admissible as evidence of the facts named therein, and all Courts shall take judicial notice of every such official seal and signature as is in this Section mentioned, and shall admit in evidence, without proof, the documents authenticated by it.

8. (1) The Copyright Acts shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, apply to a literary or artistic work first produced in a British Possession in like manner as they apply to a work first produced in the United Kingdom:

Application
of Copyright Acts to Colonies.

Provided that—

(A) The enactments respecting the registry of the copyright in such work shall not apply if the law of such Possession provides for the registration of such copyright; and

(B) Where such work is a book the delivery to any persons or body of persons of a copy of any such work shall not be required.

(2) Where a Register of Copyright in books is kept under the authority of the Government of a British Possession, an extract from that register purporting to be certified as a true copy by the officer keeping it, and authenticated by the public seal of the British Possession, or by the official seal or the signature of the governor of a British Possession, or of a colonial secretary, or of some secretary or minister administering a department of the Government of a British Possession, shall be admissible in evidence of the contents of that register, and all Courts shall take judicial notice of every such seal and signature, and shall admit in evidence, without further proof, all documents authenticated by it.

(3) Where before the passing of this Act an Act or Ordinance has been passed in any British Possession respecting copyright in any literary or artistic works, Her Majesty in Council may make an Order modifying the Copyright Acts and this Act, so far as they apply to such British Possession, and to literary and artistic works first produced therein, in such manner as to Her Majesty in Council seems expedient.

(4) Nothing in the Copyright Acts or this Act shall prevent the passing in a British Possession of any Act or Ordinance respecting the copyright within the limits of such Possession of works first produced in that Possession.

Application
of International Copyright
Acts to Colonies.

9. Where it appears to Her Majesty expedient that an Order in Council under the International Copyright Acts made after the passing of this Act as respects any foreign country should not apply to any British Possession, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty by the same or any other Order in Council to declare that such Order and the International Copyright Acts and this Act shall not, and the same shall not, apply to such British Possession, except so far as is necessary for preventing any prejudice to any rights acquired previously to the date of such Order; and the expressions in the said Acts relating to Her Majesty's Dominions shall be construed accordingly; but save as provided by such declaration the said Acts and this Act shall apply to every British Possession as if it were part of the United Kingdom.

Making of Orders in Council.

10. (1) It shall be lawful for Her Majesty from time to time to make Orders in Council for the purposes of the International Copyright Acts and this Act, for revoking or altering any Order in Council previously made in pursuance of the said Acts, or any of them.

(2) Any such Order in Council shall not affect prejudicially any rights acquired or accrued at the date of such Order coming into operation, and shall provide for the protection of such rights.

ORDER IN COUNCIL, 28th NOVEMBER, 1887.

AT THE COURT AT WINDSOR, THE 28TH DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1887.

WHEREAS the Convention of which an English translation is set out in the First Schedule to this Order has been concluded between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the foreign countries named in this Order, with respect to the protection to be given by way of copyright to the authors of literary and artistic works:

And whereas the ratifications of the said Convention were exchanged on the Fifth day of September, One thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, between Her Majesty the Queen and the Governments of the foreign countries following, that is to say:

Belgium; France; Germany; Haiti; Italy; Spain; Switzerland;
Tunis:

And whereas Her Majesty in Council is satisfied that the foreign countries named in this Order have made such provisions as it appears to Her Majesty expedient to require for the protection of authors of works first produced in Her Majesty's Dominions:

Now, therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, and by virtue of the authority committed to Her by The Internationa' Copyright Acts, 1844 to 1886, doth order, and it is hereby ordered, as follows:

1. The Convention as set forth in the First Schedule to this Order, shall, as from the commencement of this Order, have full effect throughout Her Majesty's Dominions, and all persons are enjoined to observe the same.

2. This Order shall extend to the foreign countries following, that is to say:

Belgium; France; Germany; Haiti; Italy; Spain; Switzerland;
Tunis;

and the above countries are in this Order referred to as the foreign countries of the Copyright Union, and those foreign countries together with Her Majesty's Dominions are in this Order referred to as the countries of the Copyright Union.

3. The author of a literary or artistic work which, on or after the commencement of this Order, is first produced in one of the foreign countries of the Copyright Union shall, subject as in this Order and in The International Copyright Acts, 1844 to 1886, mentioned, have as respects that work throughout Her Majesty's Dominions the same right of copyright, including any right capable of being conferred by an Order in Council under Section 2 or Section 5 of The International Copyright Act, 1844, or under any other enactment, as if the work had been first produced in the United Kingdom, and shall have such right during the same period:

Provided that the author of a literary or artistic work shall not have any greater right or longer term of copyright therein than that which he enjoys in the country in which the work is first produced.

The author of any literary or artistic work first produced before the commencement of this Order shall have the rights and remedies to which he is entitled under Section 6 of The International Copyright Act, 1886.

4. The rights conferred by The International Copyright Acts, 1844 to 1886, shall, in the case of a literary or artistic work first produced in one of the foreign countries of the Copyright Union by an author who is not a subject or citizen of any of the said foreign countries, be limited as follows: that is to say, the author shall not be entitled to take legal proceedings in Her Majesty's Dominions for protecting any copyright in such work, but the publisher of such work shall, for the purpose of any legal proceedings in Her Majesty's Dominions for protecting any copyright in such work, be deemed to be entitled to such copyright as if he were the author, but without prejudice to the rights of such author and publisher as between themselves.

5. A literary or artistic work first produced simultaneously in two or more countries of the Copyright Union shall be deemed for the purpose of copyright to have been first produced in that one of those countries in which the term of copyright in the work is shortest.

7. The Orders mentioned in the Second Schedule to this Order are hereby revoked:

Provided that neither such revocation, nor anything else in this Order, shall prejudicially affect any right acquired or accrued before the commencement of this Order, by virtue of any Order hereby revoked, and any person entitled to such right shall continue entitled thereto, and to the remedies for the same, in like manner as if this Order had not been made.

8. This Order shall be construed as if it formed part of The International Copyright Act, 1886.

And the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury are to give the necessary orders herein accordingly.

C. L. PEEL.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

THE BERNE CONVENTION.

Convention for protecting effectively and in as uniform a manner as possible the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works. Made on the Fifth day of September, One thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India; His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia; His Majesty the King of the Belgians; Her Majesty the Queen Regent of Spain, in the name of His Catholic Majesty the King of Spain; the President of the French Republic; the President of the Republic of Haiti; His Majesty the King of Italy; the Federal Council of the Swiss Confederation; His Highness the Bey of Tunis.

ARTICLE I.

The Contracting States [which are Great Britain, Germany, Belgium, Spain, France, Haiti, Switzerland, and Tunis] are constituted into an Union for the protection of the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works.

ARTICLE II.

Authors of any of the countries of the Union, or their lawful representatives, shall enjoy in the other countries, for their works, whether published in one of those countries or unpublished, the rights which the respective laws do now or may hereafter grant to natives.

The enjoyment of these rights is subject to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by law in the country of origin of the work, and cannot exceed in the other countries the term of protection granted in the said country of origin.

The country of origin of the work is that in which the work is first published, or if such publication takes place simultaneously in several countries of the Union, that one of them in which the shortest term of protection is granted by law.

For unpublished works the country to which the author belongs is considered the country of origin of the work.

ARTICLE III.

The stipulations of the present Convention apply equally to the publishers of literary and artistic works published in one of the countries of the Union, but of which the authors belong to a country which is not a party to the Union.

ARTICLE IV.

The expression "literary and artistic works" comprehends books, pamphlets, and all other writings; dramatic or dramatico-musical works, musical compositions with or without words; works of design, painting, sculpture, and engraving; lithographs, illustrations, geographical charts; plans, sketches, and plastic works relative to geography, topography, architecture, or science in general; in fact, every production whatsoever in the literary, scientific, or artistic domain which can be published by any mode of impression or reproduction.

ARTICLE V.

Authors of any of the countries of the Union, or their lawful representatives, shall enjoy in the other countries the exclusive right of making or authorising the translation of their works until the expiration of ten years from the publication of the original work in one of the countries of the Union.

For works published in incomplete parts (livraisons) the period of Ten Years commences from the date of publication of the last part of the original work.

For works composed of several volumes published at intervals, as well as for bulletins or collections (cahiers) published by literary or scientific societies, or by private persons, each volume, bulletin, or collection is, with regard to the period of Ten Years, considered as a separate work.

In the cases provided for by the present Article, and for the calculation of the period of protection, the 31st December of the year in which the work was published is admitted as the date of publication.

ARTICLE VI.

Authorised translations are protected as original works. They consequently enjoy the protection stipulated in Articles II. and III. as regards their unauthorised reproduction in the countries of the Union.

It is understood that, in the case of a work for which the translating right has fallen into the public domain, the translator cannot oppose the translation of the same work by other writers.

ARTICLE VII.

Articles from newspapers or periodicals published in any of the countries of the Union may be reproduced in original or in translation in the other countries of the Union, unless the authors or publishers have expressly forbidden it. For periodicals it is sufficient if the prohibition is made in a general manner at the beginning of each number of the periodical.

This prohibition cannot in any case apply to articles of political discussion, or to the reproduction of news of the day or current topics.

ARTICLE VIII.

As regards the liberty of extracting portions from literary or artistic works for use in publications destined for educational or scientific purposes, or for chrestomathies, the matter is to be decided by the legislation of the different countries of the Union, or by special arrangements existing or to be concluded between them.

ARTICLE IX.

The stipulations of Article II. apply to the public representation of dramatic or dramatico-musical works, whether such works be published or not.

Authors of dramatic or dramatico-musical works, or their lawful representatives, are, during the existence of their exclusive right of translation, equally protected against the unauthorised public representation of translations of their works.

The stipulations of Article II. apply equally to the public performance of unpublished musical works, or of published works in which the author has expressly declared on the title-page or commencement of the work that he forbids the public performance.

ARTICLE X.

Unauthorised indirect appropriations of a literary or artistic work of various kinds, such as adaptations, arrangements of music, &c., are specially included amongst the illicit reproductions to which the present Convention applies, when they are only the reproduction of a particular work, in the same form, or in another form, with non-essential alterations, additions, or abridgments, so made as not to confer the character of a new original work.

It is agreed that, in the application of the present Article, the tribunals of the various countries of the Union will, if there is occasion, conform themselves to the provisions of their respective laws.

ARTICLE XI.

In order that the authors of works protected by the present Convention shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be considered as such, and be consequently admitted to institute proceedings against pirates before the Courts of the various countries of the Union, it will be sufficient that their name be indicated on the work in the accustomed manner.

For anonymous or pseudonymous works, the publisher whose name is indicated on the work is entitled to protect the rights belonging to the author. He is, without other proof, reputed the lawful representative of the anonymous or pseudonymous author.

It is, nevertheless, agreed that the tribunals may, if necessary, require the production of a certificate from the competent authority to the effect that the formalities proscribed by law in the country of origin have been accomplished, as contemplated in Article II.

ARTICLE XII.

Pirated works may be seized on importation into those countries of the Union where the original work enjoys legal protection.

The seizure shall take place conformably to the domestic law of each State.

ARTICLE XIII.

It is understood that the provisions of the present Convention cannot in any way derogate from the right belonging to the Government of each country of the Union to permit, to control, or to prohibit, by measures of domestic legislation or police, the circulation, representation, or exhibition of any works or productions in regard to which the competent authority may find it necessary to exercise that right.

ARTICLE XIV.

Under the reserves and conditions to be determined by common agreement (a), the present Convention applies to all works which at the moment of its coming into force have not yet fallen into the public domain in the country of origin.

ARTICLE XV.

It is understood that the Governments of the countries of the Union reserve to themselves respectively the right to enter into separate and particular arrangements between each other, provided always that such arrangements confer upon authors or their lawful representatives more extended rights than those granted by the Union, or embody other stipulations not contrary to the present Convention.

ARTICLE XVI.

An International Office is established, under the name of "Office of the International Union for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works."

(a) See Paragraph 4 of Final Protocol, post, p. 180.

This office, of which the expenses will be borne by the Administrations of all the countries of the Union, is placed under the high authority of the Superior Administration of the Swiss Confederation, and works under its direction. The functions of this office are determined by common accord between the countries of the Union.

ARTICLE XVII.

The present Convention may be submitted to revisions in order to introduce therein amendments calculated to perfect the system of the Union.

Questions of this kind, as well as those which are of interest to the Union in other respects, will be considered in Conferences to be held successively in the countries of the Union by delegates of the said countries.

It is understood that no alteration in the present Convention shall be binding on the Union except by the unanimous consent of the countries composing it.

ARTICLE XVIII.

Countries which have not become parties to the present Convention, and which grant by their domestic law the protection of rights secured by this Convention, shall be admitted to accede thereto on request to that effect.

Such accession shall be notified in writing to the Government of the Swiss Confederation, who will communicate it to all the other countries of the Union.

Such accession shall imply full adhesion to all the clauses and admission to all the advantages provided by the present Convention.

ARTICLE XIX.

Countries acceding to the present Convention shall also have the right to accede thereto at any time for their colonies or foreign possessions.

They may do this either by a general declaration comprehending all their colonies or possessions within the accession, or by specially naming those comprised therein, or by simply indicating those which are excluded.

ARTICLE XX.

The present Convention shall be put in force three months after the exchange of the ratifications, and shall remain in effect for an indefinite period until the termination of a year from the day on which it may have been denounced.

Such denunciation shall be made to the Government authorised to receive accessions, and shall only be effective as regards the country making it, the Convention remaining in full force and effect for the other countries of the Union.

ARTICLE XXI.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged at Berne, within the space of one year at the latest.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto the seal of their arms.

Done at Berne, the 9th day of September, 1886.

Additional Article.

The Plenipotentiaries assembled to sign the Convention concerning the creation of an International Union for the protection of literary and artistic works have agreed upon the following additional Article, which shall be ratified together with the Convention to which it relates:—

The Convention concluded this day in no wise affects the maintenance of existing Conventions between the Contracting States, provided always that such Convention confers on authors, or their lawful representatives, rights more extended than those secured by the Union, or contain other stipulations which are not contrary to the said Convention.

In witness whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present additional Article.

Done at Berne, the 9th day of September, 1886.

Final Protocol.

In proceeding to the signature of the Convention concluded this day, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have declared and stipulated as follows :—

1. As regards Article IV. it is agreed that those countries of the Union where the character of artistic works is not refused to photographs engage to admit them to the benefits of the Convention concluded to-day from the date of its coming into effect. They are, however, not bound to protect the authors of such works further than is permitted by their own legislation, except in the case of international engagements already existing, or which may hereafter be entered into by them.

It is understood that an authorised photograph of a protected work of art shall enjoy legal protection in all the countries of the Union, as contemplated by the said Convention, for the same period as the principal right of reproduction of the work itself subsists, and within the limits of private arrangements between those who have legal rights.

2. As regards Article IX. it is agreed those countries of the union whose legislation implicitly includes choregraphic works amongst dramatico-musical works expressly admit the former works to the benefits of the Convention concluded this day.

It is, however, understood that questions which may arise on the application of this clause shall rest within the competence of the respective tribunals to decide.

3. It is understood that the manufacture and sale of instruments for the mechanical reproduction of musical airs which are copyright shall not be considered as constituting an infringement of musical copyright.

4. The common agreement alluded to in Article XIV. of the Convention is established as follows:—

The application of the Convention to works which have not fallen into the public domain at the time when it comes into force shall operate according to the stipulations on this head which may be contained in special Conventions either existing or to be concluded.

In the absence of such stipulations between any countries of the Union, the respective countries shall regulate, each for itself, by its domestic legislation, the manner in which the principle contained in Article XIV. is to be applied.

5. The organisation of the International Office established in virtue of Article XVI. of the Convention shall be fixed by a Regulation which shall be drawn up by the Government of the Swiss Confederation.

The official language of the International Office will be French.

The International Office will collect all kinds of information relative to the protection of the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works. It will arrange and publish such information. It will study questions of general utility likely to be of interest to the Union, and, by the aid of documents placed at its disposal by the different Administrations, will edit a periodical publication in the French language treating questions which concern the Union. The Governments of the countries of the Union reserve to themselves the faculty of authorising, by common accord, the publication by the Office of an edition in one or more other languages, if experience should show this to be requisite.

The International Office will always hold itself at the disposal of Members of the Union, with the view to furnish them with any special information they may require relative to the protection of literary and artistic works.

The Administration of the country where a Conference is about to be held will prepare the programme of the Conference with the assistance of the International Office.

The Director of the International Office will attend the sittings of the Conferences, and will take part in the discussions without a deliberative voice. He will make an annual report on his administration, which shall be communicated to all the Members of the Union.

The expenses of the Office of the International Union shall be shared by the Contracting States. Unless a fresh arrangement be made, they cannot exceed a sum of 60,000 fr. a year. This sum may be increased by the decision of one of the Conferences provided for in Article XVII.

The share of the total expense to be paid by each country shall be determined by the division of the contracting and acceding States into six classes, each of which shall contribute in the proportion of a certain number of units, viz. :—

First Class	25 units.
Second	„	.	.	.	20 „
Third	„	.	.	.	15 „
Fourth	„	.	.	.	10 „
Fifth	„	.	.	.	5 „
Sixth	„	.	.	.	3 „

These co-efficients will be multiplied by the number of States of each class, and the total product thus obtained will give the number of units by which the total expense is to be divided. The quotient will give the amount of the unity of expense.

Each State will declare, at the time of its accession, in which of the said classes it desires to be placed.

The Swiss Administration will prepare the budget of the Office, superintend its expenditure, make the necessary advances, and draw up the annual account, which shall be communicated to all the other Administrations.

6. The next Conference shall be held at Paris between four and six years from the date of the coming into force of the Convention.

The French Government will fix the date within these limits after having consulted the International Office.

7. It is agreed that, as regards the exchange of ratifications contemplated in Article XXI., each contracting party shall give a single instrument, which shall be deposited, with those of the other States, in the Government Archives of the Swiss Confederation. Each party shall receive in exchange a copy of the procès-verbal of the exchange of ratifications, signed by the Plenipotentiaries present.

The present Final Protocol, which shall be ratified with the Convention concluded this day, shall be considered as forming an integral part of the said Convention, and shall have the same force, effect, and duration.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same.

Done at Berne, the 9th day of September, 1886.

it is hereby made the duty of the Librarian of Congress to furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury copies of the entries of titles of all books and other articles wherein the copyright has been completed by the deposit of two copies of such book printed from type set within the limits of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and by the deposit of two copies of such other article made or produced in the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to prepare and print, at intervals of not more than a week, catalogues of such title entries for distribution to the collectors of customs of the United States and to the postmasters of all post offices receiving foreign mails, and such weekly lists, as they are issued, shall be furnished to all parties desiring them, at a sum not exceeding Five Dollars per annum; and the Secretary and the Postmaster-General are hereby empowered and required to make and enforce such rules and regulations as shall prevent the importation into the United States, except upon the conditions above specified, of all articles prohibited by this Act.

Section 4959. The proprietor of every copyright book or other article shall deliver at the office of the Librarian of Congress, or deposit in the mail, addressed to the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, a copy of every subsequent edition wherein any substantial changes shall be made. Provided, however, that the alterations, revisions, and additions made to books by foreign authors heretofore published, of which new editions shall appear subsequently to the taking effect of this Act, shall be held and deemed capable of being copyrighted as above provided for in this Act, unless they form a part of the series in course of publication at the time this Act shall take effect.

6. That Section 4963 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:—

Section 4963. Every person who shall insert or impress such notice, or words of the same purport, in or upon any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, print, cut, engraving, or photograph, or other article, for which he has not obtained a copyright shall be liable to a penalty of One Hundred Dollars, recoverable one half for the person who shall sue for such penalty, and one half to the use of the United States.

7. That Section 4964 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:—

Section 4964. Every person who, after the recording of the title of any book and the depositing of two copies of such book, as provided by this Act, shall, contrary to the provisions of this Act, within the term limited, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in presence of two or more witnesses, print, publish, dramatise, translate, or import, or knowing the same to be so printed, published, dramatised, translated, or imported, shall sell or expose to sale any copy of such book shall forfeit every copy thereof to such proprietor, and shall also forfeit and pay such damages as may be recovered in a civil action by such proprietor in any Court of competent jurisdiction.

Section 4965. If any person, after the recording of the title of any map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, print, cut, engraving or photograph, or chromo, or of the description of any painting, drawing, statue, statuary, or model or design intended to be perfected and executed as a work of the fine arts, as provided by this Act, shall within the term limited, contrary to the provisions of this Act, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, signed in presence of two or more witnesses, engrave, etch, work, copy, print, publish, dramatise, translate, or import, either in whole or in part, or by varying the main design with intent to evade the law, or knowing the same to be so printed, published, dramatised, translated, or imported, should sell or expose to sale any copy of such map or other article as aforesaid, he shall forfeit to the proprietor all the plates on which the same shall be copied and every sheet thereof, either copied or printed, and shall further forfeit One Dollar for every sheet of the same found in his possession, either printing, printed, copied, published, imported, or exposed for sale, and in case of a painting, statue, or statuary, he shall forfeit Ten Dollars for every copy of the same in his possession, or by him sold or exposed for sale, one half thereof to the proprietor and the other half to the use of the United States.

9. That Section 4967 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:—

Section 4967. Every person who shall print or publish any manuscript whatever without the consent of the author or proprietor first obtained, shall be liable to the author or proprietor for all damages occasioned by such injury.

10. That Section 4971 of the Revised Statutes be and the same is hereby repealed.

11. That for the purpose of this Act each volume of a book in two or more volumes, when such volumes are published separately, and the first one shall not have been issued before this Act shall take effect, and each number of a periodical, shall be considered an independent publication, subject to the form of copyrighting as above.

12. That this Act shall go into effect on the First day of July, Anno Domini Eighteen Hundred and Ninety-one.

13. That this Act shall only apply to a citizen or subject of a foreign state or nation when such foreign state or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens, or when such foreign state or nation is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, by the terms of which agreement the United States of America may, at its pleasure, become a party to such agreement. The existence of either of the conditions aforesaid shall be determined by the President of the United States by proclamation made from time to time as the purposes of this Act may require.

CONCISE PRECEDENTS

UNDER

THE COMPANIES ACTS.

BY

F. GORE-BROWNE, M.A.,

OF THE INNER TEMPLE, BARRISTER-AT-LAW,

JOINT AUTHOR OF

"A Handy Book on the Formation, Management, and Winding Up of Joint Stock Companies."

Containing numerous Precedents of Memorandums and Articles of Association; Agreements with Vendors, and other Preliminary Contracts; Underwriting Letters, Commission Notes, &c.; Forms of Debentures and Trust Deeds; Schemes of Winding Up and Reconstruction of Companies and Arrangements with Creditors; Forms of Resolutions and Petitions to Reduce Capital, to alter Memorandum of Association, and to Wind Up; Notices of Motion and Summons, Pleadings in Actions, and many other Forms for various purposes.

"This book aims at supplying a real business want by providing such short and clear forms as are constantly being required by both lawyers and laymen who have to do with the Formation, the Management, and the Winding Up of Companies. With great skill the Author has kept the promise of his title-page, and given us Precedents that are concise, and to anyone who knows how much easier it is to be prolix and diffuse in such matters this is a great gain. Besides the numerous Precedents adapted to all kinds of Companies and ready for actual use, the Author has, by way of introductory remarks to each Chapter and numerous notes throughout, kept his object clearly in view, and explained everywhere all practical points as they arise, with the addition of useful hints which are evidently the outcome of experience. We have thus in one handy, well-printed volume of 550 pages for half-a-guinea a clearly arranged series of Precedents, noted up with cases down to date, and applicable to the Formation, Carrying Out, and Winding Up of a Company. We begin with the Memorandum of Association, and go right through Company business, ending even with Pleadings in Actions, and containing in its Addenda a mass of useful matter in the way of Stamps, Fees, Rules of the Stock Exchange, and the Companies Acts, all dealing with and completing the subject treated."—Manchester Guardian.

"The aim of the book is to be, in the words of its Authors, 'a trustworthy Guide to Shareholders, Directors, Promoters, Secretaries, Officers, Liquidators, and Creditors of Companies, as to their duties and rights.' The book is at once handy and exhaustive. There is no overwhelming flood of detail, and yet nothing of importance is omitted. Of all the many books which deal with company law this volume is unquestionably one of the best."—Financial News.

BY

OF LINCOLN'S INN, BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

In preparing the Third Edition the Authors have considerably extended several of the Chapters, and many additions have been made to the precedents for Notices and Resolutions.

The Chapter on Books deals fully with such Books as are considered indispensable to a Joint Stock Company, and sufficient explanation is given of many others to enable a selection to be made according to requirements.

In view of the increasing popularity of Debentures, the remarks as to Debentures and Debenture Stock have been extended.

"This is the best book of the sort that we have yet seen. It explains the duties and responsibilities of a Secretary from the very commencement. The various books that are required are set out in detail, and every act in the life of a company, until its winding up, is described."—Financial News.

THE
LAW OF STAMP DUTIES

CONTAINING

The Stamp Act, 1891;

The Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891;

AND ACTS AMENDING THE SAME;

A SUMMARY OF CASE LAW; NOTES OF PRACTICE AND ADMINISTRATION;

AND THE EXCISE LICENCE DUTIES.

BY

E. N. ALPE,

Of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, and the Solicitor's Department, Inland Revenue.

This Edition has been revised and brought down to date. It contains all the alterations relating to Stamp Duties that have been effected by the various Inland Revenue and other Acts passed since 1891, and the provisions relating to the Estate, Excise, and Stamp Duties contained in The Finance Acts, 1894, 1895, and 1896.

“Mr. ALPE appears to be peculiarly well qualified to deal with the subject of the Stamp Laws. In addition to being a barrister, he holds a post in the Inland Revenue Department, Somerset House, and is consequently able to afford his readers information which an outsider could not easily obtain. We congratulate Mr. ALPE on his work. He has presented the public and the Profession with a very handy, and at the same time apparently complete and accurate, guide to the subject. The work opens with a short Introduction, which contains some of the principal rules relating to the construction to be put upon documents in order to ascertain the duty payable under the Stamp Laws: as, for instance, ‘In determining the liability to duty, regard must be had to the substance of the transaction rather than to the form of the instrument.’ The Special Exemptions in Statutes not otherwise relating to Stamps are collected in an Appendix, and will be found most useful. The Index appears complete, and the book is one we can recommend.”—Law Times.

"This is a valuable work on an Act which came into force on the 1st of January. The Authors, Messrs. RUDALL and GREIG, are experienced writers on the Law of Trusts, and their work on 'The Duties, Powers, and Liabilities of Trustees,' published in 1889, was well received. The new Act is a consolidation of the many hitherto existing Statutes relating to Trusts and Trustees; and as the book, besides giving the text of the Act, summarises a vast amount of case law reaching down to the date of going to press, and also contains the Rules of Court issued under the new Act, it should be of considerable value both to the legal practitioner and to the large number of persons who have accepted the responsible office of trustee."—Financial News.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

The aim of this book is to furnish a Commentary on the Bills of Sale Acts in direct connection, as far as possible, with the language of the Acts. With this view certain topics capable of separate treatment are dealt with in a General Introduction, and in the later parts of the work the repealed Acts are printed for reference, and the Acts now in force are fully annotated in chronological order. The Author trusts that the book will be thought sufficiently distinctive in method to justify its publication, and that practitioners will find it a convenient and trustworthy guide to a peculiarly difficult subject.
