- (2.) The date of publication of the first number or part (y).
- (3.) The name and place of abode of the proprietor.
- (4.) The name and place of abode of the first publisher, if he is not the proprietor.

This registration protects each subsequent number as it is published; but not numbers yet unpublished. An injunction cannot therefore be granted restraining copying from future numbers, the copyright in which only arises on publication (z). Similarly the particular article for which protection is claimed must be shewn to be capable of copyright. The Courts have not yet considered what portions of a newspaper are copyright, but it seems that though rival papers may go straight to the original sources of information, they are not at liberty to copy the telegrams of special correspondents, or special scientific or literary articles on the plea that news is common to all.

Certified copies of the entry in the register, supplied by the Stationers' Company on payment of five shillings, are to be received in evidence in all Courts, and are primâ facie proof of the proprietorship or assignment of copyright therein expressed (a), subject to be rebutted by other evidence. The defendant in any proceedings for infringement of copyright in books must give the plaintiff a notice in writing of any objections on which he means to rely at the trial, and if he alleges a different author, first publisher, or proprietor than the entry, or another date of first publication, he must state in his notice whom he alleges to be such author, first publisher or proprietor, or what date he alleges for first publication and the title of the book then published, and he will not be allowed to take any other objection than that named in the notice (b). It will probably be sufficient in the present state of pleading to embody the objections in the defence (c).

Authorities differ as to whether it is open to the defendant to take an objection to the plaintiff's registration arising on the plaintiff's own evidence, though he has given no notice of such objection as required by the statute. In several cases this has not been allowed (d), in others the defendant has been heard (e). It will always be safer to take every objection to registration in the defence, and in view of the words of the Act, which are "no other objection shall be allowed to be made on behalf of such defendant than the objection stated in such notice," it would seem that though the point arises on the plaintiff's evidence, the defendant is precluded by statute from taking it unless he has given notice of his objection beforehand (f).

(b) See the clause itself; which is very complicated: 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 16.

(c) Cf. Finnegan v. James, L. R. 19 Eq. 72; notice of the objection in an affidavit in the cause will not do. Hayward v. Lely, 56 L. T. 418.

If any particular in the registration of copyright or of any assignment thereof is proved to be inaccurate and misleading (g), the plaintiff will fail in this particular action, though he may make a new registration and sue for subsequent infringements. But inaccurate or unfounded entries can be dealt with in a more summary way. If made wilfully, the person making a false entry is guilty of an indictable misdemeanour (h); while under any circumstances any person who deems himself aggrieved by any entry may apply to the Queen's Bench Division by motion for an order that such entry may be expunged or varied (i).

Registration.

A definition of "a person aggrieved" was furnished by Hannen, J., in Graves' Case (h): "A person to be aggrieved within the meaning of the section must shew that the entry is inconsistent with some right that he sets up in himself or in some other person, or that the entry would really interfere with some intended action on the part of the person making the application." The judgment of Blackburn, J., in the same case, suggests that the applicant must have some substantial objection, and one going to the merits of the registered proprietor's title, and that merely technical flaws in the registration will not suffice to support an application.

It does not seem necessary that the applicant should have any right in the nature of copyright in the work registered; to hold this would render the section inapplicable to persons registering works which really were not the copyright of any one, and which other persons had been selling for years. This view is supported by the remarks of Parke, B., in Chappell v. Purday (l): "The legislature has not stated what persons are to be considered as 'aggrieved' by the entry, but I think that term applies to those only whose title conflicts with the plaintiff's. Any person wishing to publish a work may deny another's claim of monopoly in that work, and may on that account be considered as a party aggrieved."

The relief must be specifically asked for by motion, and cannot be granted as an auxiliary remedy in an action for infringement, unless specifically claimed in the pleadings (m). It can be made on the motion of the person who has made the entry (n). The order will not usually be made on affidavit, except in a clear case, but an issue will be directed to ascertain the facts. Sometimes the party who has registered has consented not to use the entries on the trial of the action or issue (o); and in one case (p), the Court of Queen's Bench made an order without his consent that he should not use these entries at the trial of the issue, but this view was immediately dissented from by the Court of Common Pleas (q), and was also contrary to the view of the Court of Exchequer (r).

Lord St. Leonards, in Jefferies v. Boosey (x), expressed a strong opinion that copyright was one and indivisible; "a right which may be transferred, but cannot be divided." The Act of 1842 (y) however clearly contemplates partial assignments; and s. 13 expressly authorizes a registered proprietor to assign a portion of his copyright by entry in the register. Lord St. Leonards' difficulties have therefore been provided for by statute.

THE English Law as to Copyright in Works of Fine Art is even more complicated than the law which establishes literary property. Three separate sets of statutes deal with copyright in prints and engravings, sculptures, and paintings, drawings, and photographs respectively, and deal with them in a very confusing way. The law as to engravings is to be found in 8 Geo. II. c. 13, amended by 7 Geo. III. c. 38, and 17 Geo. III. c. 57, and in 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 59, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12, s. 14. Sculptures are regulated by 54 Geo. III. c. 56, and paintings, drawings, and photographs by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68. Codifying and amending bills have from time to time been brought before Parliament, but hitherto without success. Before endeavouring to reduce into order the existing chaos of legislation, there is, however, the question of property in unpublished works of art.

statutes.

NOTE.—The six Acts, which formerly regulated Copyright in Designs, have been repealed by the Patents Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57); which provides new law on the subject, see ss. 47-61.

SECTION I.

Unpublished Works.

Unpublished works of art.—Cases on the subject: Prince Albert v. Strange.—Jefferys v. Boosey.—Turner v. Robinson.—Statute of 1862.—Recent cases.—Result.—What is publication? Turner v. Robinson.—General conclusions.

Unpublished works of

The owner of a picture, engraving, drawing, photograph, sculpture, or other work of fine art, has a right before publication to prevent any copy being made of it (a).

The Act of 1862 (b), which was passed two years after the last of the cases cited as authorities, commences with the startling preamble: "Whereas by law, as now established, the authors of paintings, drawings, and photographs have no copyright in such their works." The explanation must clearly be that the phrase "copyright" is used in the restricted sense in which it had been used in the great case of Jefferys v. Boosey (c), (1854), "the exclusive right of multiplying copies of a work already published." However, in a case at Nisi Prius, before Day, J., in 1883 (d), that learned judge expressed considerable doubt as to the effect of the preamble. The present Mr. Justice Stephen also, in his digest of the law appended to the report of the Copyright Commission, when speaking of (e) "the assumption on which the Act is based, that apart from it there is no copyright in paintings, etc.," says: "This assumption is however not absolutely correct . . . It can hardly have been intended to abolish the common law principles as to unpublished compositions by this statute, but I am not sure that that is not its effect."

works of art.

It is therefore desirable to go a little more in detail into the authority for the original proposition.

It is unnecessary to refer again to the cases in support of unpublished literary property, which however are based on the same principle (f). The case in which the question first arose is the celebrated one of Prince Albert v. Strange (g) (1849).

Cases :
*Prince
Strange.*

In that case the Queen and Prince Albert had been in the habit of making etchings and drawings for their own amusement, and of having copies struck off from the etched plates by workmen. They had no intention of publishing these works, and designed the copies for their private use and for presentation to a few intimate friends. The workman they employed struck off copies on his own account, and retained them; he afterwards parted with the collection he had thus formed, which finally came into the hands of Strange, who proposed to exhibit it to the public, and to publish a descriptive catalogue. Prince Albert applied for an injunction as to both the exhibition and the catalogue, which was granted by Vice-Chancellor Shadwell, whose order was affirmed on appeal by Lord Cottenham. The Lord Chancellor based his decision on the two grounds of property infringed, and breach of trust. He said (h):—
"The property of an author or composer of any work, whether of literature, art, or science, in such work, unpublished and kept for his private use or pleasure, cannot be disputed, after the many decisions in which that proposition has been affirmed or assumed, I say assumed, because in most of the cases which have been decided, the question was not as to the original right of the author, but whether what had taken place did not amount to a waiver of such right . . . a question which could not have arisen if there had not been such original right or property ;” and, again, “ the exclusive rights in the author of unpublished compositions, which depend entirely upon the common law right of property.” The Lord Chancellor also laid stress on the breach of trust in the workman who printed the copies, in retaining some impressions for himself, and finally granted the injunction on both grounds, the right of property infringed, and the breach of trust (i).

Jefferys
(1854).

The next case which may indirectly throw some light on the question is the case of Jefferys v. Boosey (k), in which, though the main question was as to whether English copyright could exist in the work of a foreign author, first published in England by his assignee, yet the Law Lords, after hearing the judges, were led to deal with the question of copyright at common law. And Lord Cranworth, the Lord Chancellor, at the beginning of his judgment, says (p. 954): “ The right now in question is not the right to publish, or to abstain from publishing, a work not yet published at all, but the exclusive right of multiplying copies of a work already published.” Copyright, thus defined, if not the creature, as I believe it to be, of our own statute law, is now entirely regulated by it. Lord Brougham again says (p. 962): "The right of the author before publication we may take to be unquestioned . . . But if he makes his composition public, can he retain the exclusive right which he had before?" Lord St. Leonards also holds (p. 977) "that no common law right to copyright exists after publication," and again (p. 979): "The common law does give a man who has composed a work a right to that composition, just as he had a right to any other part of his personal property; but the question of the right of excluding all the world from copying, and of himself claiming the exclusive right of for ever copying his own composition, after he has published it to the world, is a totally different thing."

(i) Cf. Tuck v. Priester, 19 Q. B. D. 629.

(k) 4 H. L. C. 815.

Cases :
Jefferys
v. Boosey
(1854).

All the dicta therefore in Jefferys v. Boosey are addressed to the proposition that copyright after publication rests entirely on the statute law; the common-law property before publication is unhesitatingly admitted, and nothing is said to qualify the direct decision in Prince Albert v. Strange (l).

And the later Irish case of Turner v. Robinson (m) (1860), as affirmed on appeal, while of most importance in considering what constitutes publication, also fully confirms the common law right. The question in that case is not whether the right exists, but whether it has been waived or lost. The defendant's counsel commence their argument (p. 511) by the admission that the owner of a work has a right "to keep it secret." The Lord Chancellor confirms this, and remarks on the ambiguity of the word "copyright," as applicable both to the common law right of ownership before publication, and the statutory right of control after publication.

of 1862.

Down to 1862 therefore there are clear decisions of the highest authority for a common law right of property, sometimes called "copyright," in unpublished artistic works; and the only authority to the contrary is the preamble of the statute of 1862 (n), "Whereas by law as now established, the authors of paintings, drawings, and photographs have no copyright in such their works." This is, as a statement of the existing law, untrue, unless "copyright" is used in the limited sense in which it was used in Jefferys v. Boosey and which was referred to in Turner v. Robinson, viz., the exclusive right to multiply copies of a work after publication.

And it is submitted that the preamble must be clearly interpreted in that sense rather than in the broader sense, which would state incorrectly the result of three decisions of the highest authority within the previous thirteen years, and in effect reverse those decisions.

Recent
cases.

The recent case of Tuck v. Priester (o) also shews that the doubts of Mr. Justice Stephen and Mr. Justice Day are unfounded. The judgment of Lindley, L.J., in that case makes it clear that "copyright" in the preamble of the statute of 1862, means the exclusive right of multiplying copies of a work already published which is the creature of statute, while what is sometimes called "copyright at common law" is really an incident of property, and not "copyright" in the strict sense.

The right to prevent copies being made of an unpublished work may be in different hands from the work itself. Such a separation was admitted in the cases of Duke of Queensberry v. Shebbeare (p), and Thompson v.

(n) 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68.

(o) 19 Q. B. D. 629.

(p) 2 Eden, 329.

Stanhope (q), in each of which the property in the work, or a copy of it, was distinguished from a right to publish it, and it was held that the proprietor of the right to publish could restrain the proprietor of the manuscript from printing it. It is true that in each of these cases the proprietor of the right to publish was also the author, but it is submitted that the reversal of the relation would make no difference. Possibly where the proprietor of the right to publish is not the author, he can only exercise his right through the author, or by an action against the author, but the result is the same. Recent cases.

In recapitulation therefore the author or proprietor of an unpublished work of art has by the common law of England the right to prevent any copy of such work being made or published without his consent. Result.

This right ceases on publication, after which the position of the author or proprietor is regulated entirely by the statute law. Before therefore dealing with the statutory provisions on the subject, we may consider the rather difficult question of what constitutes publication. What is publication?

And, curiously enough, the English law is almost devoid of authority on the subject. Sir J. F. Stephen, in his Digest, says (r): "As to what amounts to a publication of a work of art, I know of no precise authority." This probably overlooks the Irish case of Turner v. Robinson (s), and there are also one or two scattered dicta on the subject, but the point is certainly by no means clear. •

Turner v. Robinson was decided on appeal in Ireland by the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, and Turner v. Robinson.

the Lord Justice of Appeal in 1860, two years before the English Act which gave copyright to paintings. The facts of the case were shortly these. In 1856, Henry Wallis painted a picture representing the 'Death of Chatterton,' and in the same year sold it to Egg; in 1859 Turner purchased from Egg "the sole right to engrave and publish an engraving of the picture," with possession of the picture for a certain time for the purpose of exhibiting it to obtain subscriptions for his engravings. While Turner was thus exhibiting it in Dublin, Robinson, the defendant, having seen the picture at the exhibition, arranged models to represent the picture in his studio, and from them obtained a stereoscopic photograph, which he offered for sale. Turner applied for an injunction to restrain the sale. There was no statutory copyright in pictures existing; the only ground therefore for the injunction must be at common law, and the defendant's counsel accepted the position that a common law right existed, but contended that it had been lost by publication. The sole question before the Court was whether the prior dealings with the picture constituted a publication, and these prior dealings were as follows:—

tions.*

The picture had been exhibited by Wallis at the Royal Academy in 1856.

In the same year, by Wallis' permission, a wood engraving of the picture had been published in the 'National Magazine,' with a descriptive article.

The picture had also been exhibited at the Manchester Exhibition in 1857, and by Turner in Dublin in 1859.

With regard to the exhibition at the Academy and at Manchester, it appeared that, at each gallery, copying the pictures exhibited was absolutely forbidden, and with regard to the exhibition at Dublin, though there was no express rule as to copying, the plaintiff had published a general notice against photographic infringements of his pictures before the exhibition commenced. Turner v. Robinson.

These facts were held both by the Master of the Rolls and the Court of Appeal not to constitute such publication as divested the common-law copyright; they agreed that there had been in the case of the exhibitions limited or conditional publication, the condition being that the inspection by members of the public was not to be used by them for the purpose of reproducing copies of the picture; but they held that such a limited publication was not fatal to the plaintiff's rights. As to the wood engraving, the Master of the Rolls held that its publication could not affect the copyright in the picture, though the artist or proprietor of the picture could not sue if the engraving were pirated.

The judgments contain no very clear principle of publication; but it would seem that it must consist in unconditional exhibition of a work to the public, or such of the public as choose to come to inspect it (t).

In Blank v. Footman (u), shewing a design to two customers and asking for orders was held publication of the design, but in Turner v. Robinson (x) the fact that persons who came to see the picture were asked for subscriptions to an engraving of it, was not treated as publication. The Sculpture Act (y) gives copyright from "the first putting forth and publishing" the sculpture in question, which is explained by the Lord Chancellor in Turner v. Robinson (x) as "the moment when the eye of the public first rests upon it." Similarly copyright under the Engraving Acts dates from "first publication" of the engravings, which appear to mean exposure to the public, whether for sale or not. Mayall v. Higbey (z) (1862) seems to be an authority for the proposition that a loan of photographs, in order that engravings may be made from them and published, does not amount to publication of the photographs.

General
sions.

On the other hand, the Act of 1862 (a), giving statutory copyright to paintings and drawings, the term being for the life of the author and seven years after his death, throws some difficulties in the way of the above conception of publication as putting an end to copyright at common law. The copyright which is created by that statute belongs to "the author of every original painting, drawing, or photograph," wherever made, and apparently quite independent of the question of publication. For the mere making of a painting, which is kept in privacy in the same way as a manuscript poem, cannot be called "publication" without great straining of language. We are reduced apparently to these two alternatives:—

1. Either there is a common law copyright in all works of art till publication; and a statutory copyright commencing in the case of sculptures, engraving, and prints on their publication, and in the case of drawings, paintings, and photographs on their making, thus giving in the latter case, as in the case of lectures, an overlapping statutory or common law right till publication.

2. Or there is in sculptures, engravings, and prints a common law copyright till their publication, when statutory copyright commences; while in paintings, drawings, and photographs there is no common law copyright; there is a statutory copyright commencing on their making, but requiring their registration before it can be enforced. General conclusions.

It is submitted that the former is the more correct view of the law, as best agreeing with the principles of unpublished property, which undoubtedly applied, prior to the Act of 1862, to paintings, drawings, and photographs until their publication (b).

Statutes.—Subject-matter of right.—Nature of right.—Investitive facts.—Transvestitive facts.—Divestitive facts.—Infringements of copyright.—Copies in pen and pencil.—Principle of infringement.—Remedies for infringement.

The statutes at present regulating copyright in engravings and similar works of art are:— Statutes.

A “print” is defined as being “any historical print or prints, or any other print or prints of any portrait, conversation, landscape or architecture [map, chart or plan], or any other print or prints whatsoever” (c). It includes “prints taken by lithography, or any other mechanical process by which prints or impressions of drawings or designs are capable of being multiplied indefinitely” (d). Subject matter of right.

(b) Questions of a similar nature came under discussion in the American cases of Oertel v. Wood, 40 How. Pr. N.Y. 10; and Oertel v. Jacoby, 44 How. Pr. N.Y. 179, cited by Drone, p. 287, note, in which contradictory decisions were given.

right.

It was decided in the case of Stannard v. Lee (e) by the Court of Appeal, reversing the decision of Bacon, V.C. (f), that maps being defined as "books" in the Act of 1842 (g), are no longer to be treated as works of art, but as literary works, and must therefore be registered under the Act of 1842. Bacon, V.C., expressed subsequently in Stannard v. Harrison (h) his dissent from that decision.

There is probably no copyright in obscene, blasphemous, seditious, or libellous prints. (Fores v. Johnes (i).)

the right.

Any person has the sole right or liberty of multiplying, by any mechanical or other process, copies of any print, which he has:—

(I.) Invented or designed, graved, etched or worked in mezzotinto or chiaro-oscuro.

(II.) Or from his own work, design, or invention has caused or procured to be designed, &c.

(III.) Or which he has engraved or caused to be engraved, &c., from any picture, drawing, model or sculpture, whether ancient or modern (k).

Any process by which pictures or engravings may be imitated or copied may come within the express words the legislature have used (l). Thus the words include the right of producing reduced photographic copies of an engraving (m).

graver a rough sketch of a map, with directions as to its size and contents, and furnished him with information to be recorded on it from time to time, he was held entitled to the copyright in the engraving, as being one who from his own invention had caused it to be designed (n). Nature of the right.

The right is a separable one; that is to say, the right of producing engravings "of one size" can be assigned, the right of producing all other sizes of prints remaining in the original proprietor (o).

The duration of the right is for twenty-eight years from the day of first publication of the print (p). Duration of right.

The Investitive Fact of copyright in engravings is publication of such a work as specified above. Investitive facts.

To be the subject of copyright the print must be engraved, etched, drawn, or designed in Great Britain. Mere publication in Great Britain will not suffice (q).

There is no limitation as to the nationality of the engraver or designer.

No formalities as to registration are required. The day of first publication, with the name of the proprietor, must be truly engraved on each plate and printed on each print (r).

Both the date and the name of the proprietor must appear on the plate and print, but it is sufficient if the proprietor be named; he need not also be described as "proprietor."

Thus, "Newton del. 1st May 1826, Gladwin sculp.," was held a compliance with the requirements of the

If the engravings are included as illustrations in a book, the book must be registered under the Act of 1842 (u), and the requirements as to name of proprietor and date of publication need not be complied with (x).

So also maps, charts and plans must be registered, and need not comply with the formalities of the Engraving Acts (y).

Trans-vestitive facts.

A licence to reproduce an engraving, to bind the proprietor, must be in writing, and signed by the proprietor, in the presence of and attested by two or more credible witnesses (z).

The question to be decided is whether the defendant's print is substantially a copy of the plaintiff's, and published without the plaintiff's consent (a); a copy has been also defined as "that which comes so near the original as to give to every person seeing it the idea created by the original" (b). If the making of such a copy without licence is proved, it is immaterial whether the seller or maker knew that the copy was pirated or not (c). Infringements of right.

In the above statement these limitations must however be made. The object of the Acts is twofold:—

(1.) The protection of the reputation of the engraver.

(2.) His protection against any invasion of his commercial property in the print.

The work complained of as an infringement must therefore be a copy, either exact or colourable, of the plaintiff's engraving, or of that part of the plaintiff's engraving which constitutes the real merit and labour of the engraver (d).

It is not therefore a piracy of an engraving to make another engraving from the original picture, though it may be a piracy of the picture (e).

Similarly it has been held that a Berlin wool pattern made from an engraving is not a violation of copyright in the engraving (f).

The exhibition of a larger coloured diorama made from a print does not infringe the copyright in the print (g).

In Dicks v. Brooks in the Court of Appeal, Lord Justice Baggallay expressed a doubt whether or not a chromolithograph was an infringement of a print; and Lord Justice Bramwell said: "I do not say that if this were an ordinary engraving with no picture in the case, a lithograph taken from it would not be a copy. I think that a photograph taken from it would be a copy."

Copies in
pencil.

The cases are not very clear as to how far copying by pen or pencil is an infringement. Chief Justice Erle laid down the rule in Gambart v. Ball (h), as prohibiting any mode of copying or multiplication of copies which depreciates the commercial value of the engraving to its proprietor. The distinction therefore seems a question of degree. Several of the judges seem to have felt great difficulty as to the case of individual copies made, as it were, for private use. Lord Justice Baggallay in Dicks v. Brooks (i), said "the statutes cannot have been intended to apply to a lady copying a print or a part of a print upon a china plate, or to a person who for his own amusement makes an etching, drawing, or water-colour sketch from an engraving;" and Willes, J., in Gambart v. Ball (k), "felt a difficulty as to copying by hand," and "was not disposed to concur, if it had been necessary, in the view we take of the statute, to hold that a copy made by pen or pencil would be an infringement;" while Byles, J., also suggested doubts as to the case of "a man's making and selling a pen-and-ink copy of a print," and "transferring the design to a carpet, or a piece of Berlin woolwork, or a porcelain table service," without solving the doubts he suggested.

The recent case of Dicks v. Brooks (l) has dealt with the last suggestion of Mr. Justice Byles, and it is submitted that the true line of distinction on the other points is whether the copies, howsoever made, will compete commercially with the engraving by tending to lessen its sale. A skilful copyist in pen and ink or pencil might find a large market for his sketches, and it is submitted that if made for sale, or sold, they would be infringements of the copyright in the engraving of which they were copies. On the other hand, it would be ridiculous to hold that a young lady making one copy of an engraving for her own amusement was infringing copyright, although she might happen to sell her copy afterwards.

pencil.

The principle of infringement seems to be that any unlicensed copy of an engraving which may affect the sale or commercial value of the print copied will be held an infringement of copyright; but that a reproduction of the design, which cannot be held either likely to affect the sale of the engraving or such as to reproduce the engraving, will not be actionable.

Principle of infringe-ment.

Copyright is therefore infringed by:—

1. In any manner copying and selling, or causing to be copied and sold, a copyright print, [provided that the copy is of the print, and is such as to affect its commercial value].

2. Importing or causing to be imported for sale any such print.

3. Publishing, selling, or otherwise disposing of or causing to be published, sold, &c., any such print (m).

If the consent of the owner of copyright is pleaded, it must be produced in writing, signed by him, and attested by two witnesses (n).

The assignee of copyright in a print is not compelled to prove a written assignment, in order to recover damages against the infringer.

Remedies for Infringements.

The proprietor of copyright has :—

1. An action for damages against the offender (p).

Any member of the public has :—

2. An action for penalties; viz., 5s. for each print found in the offender's possession, half to go to the Crown and half to the person suing for the penalty. The plate and prints are to be forfeited to the proprietor of the copyright, who shall destroy the same (q).

This penalty is payable per print, and not per parcel or set of prints (r).

The action for penalties must be brought within six months after the commission of the offence (s).

The penalties recoverable and copies liable to forfeiture under these Acts may be recovered in England or Ireland either by action or by summary procedure before two magistrates having jurisdiction where the party offending resides, and in Scotland as set out in the Act (t).

This mode of procedure is open to the two objections set out more fully hereafter, viz. :—(1), that it is very difficult to proceed in the "places of residence" of the

SECTION III.

Paintings, Drawings, and Photographs.

Statutes.—Subject-matter of the right.—Nature of the right.—Investitive facts.—Registration.—Transvestitive facts.—Tuck v. Canton. Divestitive facts.—Infringements of the right.—Remedies and penalties.

STATUTORY copyright in paintings, drawings, and photographs was first given by the Act of 1862 (u), the preamble of which recited, that “by law as now established, the authors of paintings, drawings, and photographs have no copyright in such their works.” The meaning of this has been already discussed (x); it is submitted that it only refers to the sole right of multiplying copies after publication of the original work, as defined in Jefferys v. Boosey (y), and that a right to prevent copying a work of art exists at common law until publication. The statute covers classes of works which stand on a slightly different footing; paintings and drawings are naturally classed with sculptures, as works of which the original has most value, while copies are either rare, or inadequately represent the original; photographs on the other hand naturally fall with engravings into the class of works where mechanical reproduction gives a large number of copies of almost equal value, and the original negative or plate is analogous to the type from which a book is printed.

Subject
the right.

Copyright may exist in every original painting, drawing, and photograph which shall be or shall have been made anywhere by a British subject, or person resident within the dominions of the Crown, and which shall not have been sold or disposed of before the 29th July, 1862 (z).

If a drawing is merely a reproduction with improvements of a previous drawing, it is not an "original drawing" within the Act. If the additions and improvements are substantial, there may be copyright in them alone, as in the case of new editions of books (a).

The phrase "original photograph" is rather contradictory, as all photographs are, in one sense, "copies" of something, but it has been decided that there is copyright in a photograph taken from a picture (b). Of course, if there is no copyright in the picture copied, a second photograph taken from it will not infringe the copyright of the first photograph, and will have copyright of its own.

It is submitted, that if pictures sold before the 29th July, 1862, have never been published, copyright at common law, at any rate, exists in them until publication.

A curious difficulty, at present unsolved, arises on the wording of s. 1. Statutory copyright begins on the making of the picture (c); but the making of the picture need not be in the British dominions, for the section contemplates the picture's being made elsewhere.

(b) Graves' Case, L. R. 4 Q. B. 715.

(c) Tuck v. Priester, 19 Q. B. D. 629.

The author must however be "a British subject, or resident within the dominions of the Crown." Take first the case of a British subject who paints a picture in Germany. He obtains statutory copyright under the Act of 1862. But by s. 19 of the International Copyright Act, 1844 (d), the author of any work of art, of a class defined in an order of council (e), first published out of Her Majesty's dominions, shall have no copyright therein except under the International Copyright Act. If then a British subject, having painted his picture abroad, publishes it abroad, does he lose by publication, under the Act of 1844, the statutory copyright he had acquired under the Act of 1862. This can hardly have been intended, but it is difficult to see any other construction. Further, a foreigner resident in the British dominions can acquire copyright; but when is the "residence" to be looked at? The Act of 1862 (f), contemplates that his work may be made abroad, and it is very difficult to read the statute in any way which does not apply the words "made elsewhere" to a painting made by a resident within the dominions of the Crown. If so the residence must be at some other time than the making of the picture. Publication has been suggested as the time when residence is important, but some works of art are never published, and the result would be to leave the copyright uncertain till publication. The most satisfactory view would be to confine copyright to (1) works made anywhere by a British subject; (2) works made in the British dominions by a foreigner; but the legislature does not seem to have said so, and the question is a very difficult one.

(f) 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 1.

the right.

Nature of the Right.—Copyright in a painting, drawing, or photograph is the sole and exclusive right of copying, engraving, reproducing, and multiplying such painting or drawing, and the design thereof, or such photograph and the negative thereof, by any means and in any size (g).

This is subject to the provisions of s. 2 of the Act of 1862 (h), which provided that nothing in the Act shall prejudice the right of any person to copy or use any work in which there shall be no copyright, or to represent any scene or object, notwithstanding that there may be copyright in some representations of such scene or object. In such a case, however, the artist must go to the scene or object itself, and not simply copy another man's representation of that scene. He may paint two lovers in Huguenot costumes, saying good-bye, but he must not copy or colourably imitate Sir J. Millais' well-known picture of "The Huguenots." The principle is the same as that in the case of books, such as directories, dictionaries, and guide books (i). The judgment of Mr. Justice Wills, in Kenrick v. Lawrence (k), it is respectfully submitted, cannot be intended to contravene this principle, and must be treated as turning on the special facts of the case.

It has been suggested that the right is merely ipso genere, i.e., that, to use the words of Mr. Justice Blackburn, in the case of L'æ parte Beal (l), "the enactment might merely mean" (to forbid) "the imitation of a painting by a painting, of a drawing by a drawing, and of a photograph by a photograph, and that a photograph of a drawing would not be within the meaning of the Legislature.” But the Court in that case unanimously rejected this in favour of the wider interpretation, making “reproduction of the design” the only thing necessary to constitute an infringement of the right. This, however, must be qualified by the doctrine of Dicks v. Brooks (m), to the effect that the reproduction must be such as either injures the reputation of the artist, or affects the commercial value of his work. But this point falls more naturally under the head of infringements of copyright.

Nature of the right.

The right is treated as personal or movable estate (n).

Copyright in paintings, drawings, or photographs lasts for the natural life of the author, and seven years after his death, if the necessary conditions are complied with (o).

Duration of the right.

The investitive facts of copyright in paintings, drawings, and photographs are:—

Investitive facts.

(1.) Of the right;—the making of a work, the subject of copyright, by a British subject or a person resident within the British dominions (p).

(2.) Of the remedy:—No action shall be sustainable, nor any penalty be recoverable in respect of anything done, before registration at Stationers’ Hall of the work in respect of which copyright is claimed under the Act (q).

ment complained of, instead of simply preceding the suing for such an infringement. The copyright, however, as in the Act of 1842, does not commence on registration, but on the making of the work of art (s).

It is sufficient for the proprietor of copyright by assignment, to register his own assignment, without any registration of the original copyright, or preceding assignments (t). Once registration has been effected all subsequent assignments must be registered (u).

If the author registers, the statute apparently only requires him to register his name and place of abode, with a short description of the nature and subject of such work.

If an assignment is registered, the entry must contain:

- (1.) The date of assignment.
- (2.) The names of parties thereto.
- (3.) Name and place of abode of assignee.
- (4.) Name and place of abode of author of work.
- (5.) Short description of name and subject of work.
- (6.) Optional, a sketch, outline, or photograph of such work.

The person to sue for an infringement must be the proprietor when the infringement is committed. (Dupuy v. Dilke (x)).

Investitive facts.

Short description of Name and Subject.—What is required here has been laid down by Mr. Justice Blackburn, in the case of Ex parte Beal (a), as follows: “I do not think that it is necessary to make the description so precise as the registration of a specification of a patent, in order that all may know what it is they are prohibited from copying; or such as to give information to persons who had never heard or known of the picture, what it was they were not to copy. . . . The object of the Legislature, as pointed out by the statute, is that there shall be such a description of the picture as to enable a person who has it before him to judge whether or not the registration applied to the picture he was about to copy. It will be sufficient to describe the subject by some conventional name, and the particulars of the subject need not be given in detail.” For example, the titles: ‘Ordered on Foreign Service,’ representing an officer taking leave of a lady; ‘My First Sermon,’ representing a little child awake, sitting in a pew; and ‘My Second Sermon,’ representing the same child asleep, were held sufficient for registration, the name alone being used (b). Some doubt was expressed in the same case as to the sufficiency of the registration of the name only, of pictures entitled ‘A Distinguished Member of the Royal Humane Society,’ representing a dog; and

'A Piper and Pair of Nutcrackers,' representing a bullfinch and two squirrels; and though the point was raised subsequently in Graves' case (c), the case was decided on another issue.

Author of a Photograph.—The question as to the person answering this description was raised in the recent case of Nottage v. Jackson (d). The large photographic firms had been in the habit of registering the firm or the employer as the "author," and many thousands of photographs had been registered in this way. At last the question as to the sufficiency of such registration came before the Courts, and Mr. Justice Field held that such a registration was invalid, his ruling being affirmed by the Court of Appeal. All the judges rather shrank from the problem of finding the "author" of a photograph, though they were agreed that the photographers had not found him. It was suggested however by the Master of the Rolls, that the person who is actually present when the photograph is taken, who superintends the arrangements, places the person to be photographed, and gives the necessary orders, is probably the "author" of the photograph. His name therefore should be registered as such author, and his life will furnish the term of copyright. This ridiculous result follows from the practice of draftsmen, condemned by the Master of the Rolls, of using words in a sense in which no one else uses them.

It follows that the person who suggests a subject and directs an artist to draw it is at any rate not the sole "author" for purposes of registration, and it will be safer to register the actual artist as sole "author," and the person giving the commission for the drawing as "proprietor" (e). Investitive facts.

The provisions of the Copyright Act (f) as to the manner of keeping the register of books, and its production in evidence, apply also to the register of works of art, the fee for making any entry therein being however reduced to one shilling.

Amongst these provisions is one (g), that if any person shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry in the register, he may apply to one of the Superior Courts for an order that such entry may be expunged or varied. "A person aggrieved" was defined by Mr. Justice Hannen as "a person who can shew that the entry is inconsistent with some right that he sets up in himself, or in some other person, or that the entry would really interfere with some intended action on the part of the person making the application" (h).

In the case of illustrated newspapers, the provisions as to registration of periodical works in the Act of 1842 apply (i); and registration of the first number of the newspaper protects all original drawings appearing in subsequent numbers. It would seem, however, that if a newspaper reproduces a picture, and the copyright of the picture is not registered, it is open to any one to copy the picture, though not to copy the reproduction in the paper (k).

facts.

The Transvestitive Fact of Copyright is:—

Assignment in writing, signed by the proprietor of the copyright, or his agent appointed in writing for that purpose. Such an assignment must be registered before the assignee can sue for infringements (l).

It has been however recently decided in the case of Tuck v. Canton (m) that a document, said not to be an assignment of the entire copyright, but a licence to imitate the picture in chromo-lithography, or any form of colour-printing, does not need registration under the statute. This decision however seems open to very grave doubt. The document in question ran: "The sole right to reproduce the picture and chromos, or in any other form of colour printing, to be vested in you for the term of two years," and, on certain other conditions, absolutely. This seems a clear assignment of part of the copyright; the Act therefore requires it to be in writing (s. 3); and the words of section 4 direct registration "of every assignment of every copyright to which any person shall be entitled under this Act. It is the 3rd section, therefore, which creates a copyright assignable at law, and it is submitted that without that section even a partial assignment could not take place so as to enable the assignee to sue in person; that therefore the right of the plaintiff in that case was a copyright "to which he was entitled under the 'Act,'" and that it therefore required registration under the 4th section. Moreover, the decision seems open to this further objection; the registered proprietor of copyright may assign all his copyright in parts, or give licences covering all methods of reproduction, so that no right remains in him; yet none of these will need to be registered, and so the purpose of the Act may be defeated.

(l) 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, ss. 3, 4.

(m) See note (m), p. 171.

If Tuck v. Canton (m) is rightly decided a partial assignment, or a licence to reproduce in a certain manner, need not be registered. Trans-vestitive facts.

When the original painting, or drawing, or negative of a photograph is first sold, disposed of, or made, or executed for or on behalf of any other person for a good or valuable consideration, the vendor or maker does not retain copyright therein unless there is an express agreement in writing at or before such sale or disposition, signed by the purchaser or person giving the order, reserving to the vendor the copyright therein.

Similarly on such a sale, the vendee will not be entitled to the copyright without an agreement in writing, signed at or before the sale, by the vendor, granting the copyright to the vendee (n).

The effect of this is, that when a picture, drawing, or negative of a photograph first changes hands without any agreement in writing as to the copyright, all copyright in the picture is lost, unless the picture is made for or on behalf of any other person for a good and valuable consideration; that is to say, is executed on commission, in which case the copyright belongs to the person giving the commission, unless there is an express reservation in writing of copyright by the artist.

Another curious point arises in this section. Where a person (A.) gives an order for a photograph or engraving to a commercial firm (B.), who thereupon order one of their paid servants (C.), to execute the order, it has been suggested that C. makes the work of art for B. for valuable consideration, and that the copyright therefore passes from C., who appears to be the "author," within the meaning of Nottage v. Jackson (o), to B., without writing. It is further suggested that to get the copyright from B. to A. writing is then needed, the effect of the section being exhausted in the first transference. Mr. Justice Stirling intimated an opinion against this contention in Wooderson v. Tuck (p), and the answer probably is that both B. and C. are treated as making for valuable consideration for or on behalf of A. In some London firms, a partner of the firm is the "author" of the photographs taken for the firm, and it seems that his share of the partnership profits would be sufficient valuable consideration to vest the copyright in the firm, apart from any question of private employers. It seems clear that if B. merely give an order to their paid servant C., without any outside customer's suggestion, they will become proprietors of the copyright without more (q).

(m) 51 L. J. Q. B. 363; in Sweet v. Cutor, 11 Sim. 581, where Messrs. Sweet were allowed to sue as licensees from Lord St. Leonards, it is not stated whether they were registered, and they were ordered to sue in the name of the author.

tive facts.

The Divestitive Facts of Copyright are :—

1. Lapse of the term of copyright.
2. First sale of the work without a written agreement (r).
3. Waiver of rights, which must probably be in writing (s).

Infringe-
the right.

Infringements of Right.—The elements for infringement of copyright, are—

1. A reproduction of the design or part thereof (t) by any means and in any size.

(o) 11 Q. B. D. 627.

(p) 4 Times L. R. 57.

(q) Cf., Kenrick v. Lawrence, 25 Q. B. D. at p. 105.

(s) Ibid. s. 3.

(t) London Stereoscopic Co. v. Kelly, 5 Times L. R. 169; where the head was copied from a full length photograph.

2. Interference by such reproduction with either the artist's reputation, or the commercial value of his work (u). Infringe-
the right.

This last condition requires that the reproduction should be made for sale, or used so as to compete with a copyright work; and also that it should be of such a nature as to be mistaken for or to imitate such a work. Thus, in Dicks v. Brooks (v) a Berlin-wool work pattern was held not to infringe the copyright in an engraving; and in Martin v. Wright (x) a dioramic exhibition in colours was held not to infringe copyright in an engraving.

It should be borne in mind that in the case of a picture which has been engraved or otherwise reproduced, there are two methods of procedure against infringements: one for infringement of the copyright in the painting, when the formalities of the Act of 1862 (y) must be complied with; the other, in compliance with the provisions of the Engraving Acts (z), for infringement of copyright in the engraving. To sustain this latter it must be proved that the piratical copy is made from the engraving; as a second engraving made direct from the picture does not infringe the copyright in the first engraving.

In the case of Tuck v. Canton (a), where the assignee of the right to reproduce a picture in chromo-lithography sued an infringer of his right, it was objected that his prints did not comply with the provisions of the Engraving Acts, and Mathew, J., held that as the assignment was of the right of reproducing the picture, the plaintiff might sue for infringement of his right to reproduce the picture in a particular way, and so avoid the question as to his print. This appears to be inconsistent with the case of Lucas v. Cooke (b), in which case the partial assignment was of the right to produce an engraving in one size, while the infringement was a chromolithograph, and Fry, J., held that the plaintiff must shew that the infringement was derived from his engraving in order to succeed in his suit.

Remedies
and penalties.

The proprietor of copyright has the following remedies:—

I. Action for Penalties (c).—Every one who, without the consent of the proprietor:—

1. Repeats, copies, colourably imitates, or otherwise multiplies for sale, hire, or exhibition and distribution, or causes to be repeated, etc., any copyright work or the design thereof;

2. Knowing any copy to be unlawfully made, imports into the United Kingdom, sells, publishes, lets to hire, exhibits, distributes; or offers for sale, etc.; or causes or procures to be imported, etc., any such copy:—

Forfeits a sum of £10 per copy (d) to the owner of the copyright.

All such copies and the negatives of piratical photographs are to be forfeited to the proprietor of the copyright (e).

The Custom House officers are authorized to seize all piratical copies imported without the consent of the owner of the copyright (e).

(b) 13 Ch. D. 872.

(c) 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 6.

(d) One sale of ten copies will involve ten penalties: Ex parte Beal, L. R. 3 Q. B. 387.

(e) 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 10.

Sale after registration, of copies made before registration will be a sale of copies unlawfully made, inasmuch as copyright exists before registration (f). But, section 11 being a penal section, the Court of Appeal have refused to hold that copies made abroad before registration were unlawfully made, although their decision made the provisions against importing almost nugatory, and though they thought that "unlawfully" probably meant "without the consent of the proprietor" (f).

Remedies
and penalties.

II. Action for Damages (g) :—against any person who without the consent of the proprietor of copyright :—

1. Repeats, colourably imitates, or otherwise multiplies for sale, hire, exhibition or distribution :—or

2. Imports into any part of the United Kingdom :—or

3. Sells, publishes, exhibits or distributes :—any copy or imitation of a work of art or of the design thereof.

All such copies are to be delivered to the proprietor.

This remedy is in addition to the action for penalties.

III. An injunction to restrain future infringements.

IV. An account of copies illegally dealt with by the defendant.

Every person who :

1. Fraudulently signs, or causes to be signed, any name, initial, or monogram, upon any painting ;

2. Fraudulently sells, or exhibits any painting having thereon the signature of a person who did not execute such work ;

3. Fraudulently utters any colourable copy of any painting, etc., whether copyright or not, as the work of the author of the original ;

painting, etc., which has left the possession of the author as an unaltered copy :—

Forfeits a sum not exceeding £10, or double the full price at which such fraudulent copies were offered for sale; such copies are forfeited to the person or his assigns or representatives to whom such work is fraudulently ascribed (h). To enable these penalties to be recovered, the person to whom the painting, etc., is fraudulently attributed must have been living within twenty years previous to the alleged infringement.

The case of R. v. Closs (i), shews that, apart from this statute, such signature would not be forgery, but might be a cheat at common law, if it was alleged that through the false token the prisoner sold the picture and obtained the money.

All penalties and forfeitures may be recovered :

In England and Ireland—

1. By action.

2. By summary proceeding before any two justices having jurisdiction where the party offending resides.

In Scotland as provided by the Act (j).

The proprietor may recover also, in addition to the penalties, damages and forfeiture of the copies by an action against the infringers (k).

These penalties are not mere debts, but in the nature of a punishment, so as to prevent them being barred by a composition deed with defendant's creditors (l).

SECTION IV.

Statutes.—Nature of the right.—Investitive facts.—Infringements of the right.—Remedies for infringements.

STATUTORY Copyright in sculpture was first given in England in 1798 (m); and much strengthened in 1814 (n). The former Act has been repealed (o), and the law on the question is now to be found in the Act of 1814 (p). As appeared in the evidence of Mr. Woolner before the Copyright Commission, the copyright in sculpture is of very small importance; only one case is reported under any of the Acts, and a few scattered obiter dicta are found in cases dealing with other classes of artistic property. The case in question is that of Gahagan v. Cooper (q) (1811), for piracy of a bust of C. J. Fox, but owing to the bad wording of the Act of 1798, the plaintiff failed, Lord Ellenborough saying:—"These artists must again apply to Parliament for protection; and they had better not model the new Act themselves, as they seem to have done the old."

Some fatality however seems to attend the draftsmanship of Acts relating to sculpture. The Act of 1814<sup>(r)</sup> contains in its first clause a definition of works protected, of which Sir James Stephen says (s): "This section is a miracle of intricacy and verbosity. It also contains an 'of,' which may be a misprint, as it seems to make nonsense of several lines, and a most puzzling 'such' . . . The section forms a sentence of thirty-eight lines, the first half of which is repeated in the second half in so intricate a way that the draftsman appears to have lost himself in the middle of it. It admits of a doubt whether a cast from nature of an animal is the subject of copyright at all, and whether it must not be a cast from a cast from nature."

Nature of right.

The subject-matter of the right is any "new and original sculptures, models, copies, or casts" of a large number of things enumerated at great length in the Act. What a "new and original copy" may be is not very clear, but it is hardly worth while attempting to elucidate an Act on which no case has arisen in nearly seventy years.

Persons entitled to the right.

The persons entitled to the right are: Whoever makes or causes to be made any sculpture the subject-matter of copyright, or purchases such right from its proprietors by deed in writing signed by the proprietor in the presence of and attested by two witnesses (t).

Duration of the right.

The duration of the right is fourteen years from the first putting forth or publishing the sculpture in question (u), with a further term of fourteen years if the maker of the original sculpture shall be living at the end of the first fourteen years (x).

(t) 54 Geo. III. c. 56, s. 1.

(u) Ibid. s. 1.(x) Ibid. s. 6.

The investitive fact of copyright in sculpture is “Publication, or first putting forth.” What constitutes publication has been treated of in Turner v. Robinson (y) by Lord Chancellor Brady, where he says: “The terminus a quo from which the protection to works of sculptures commences, is the publication of the work, that is from the moment the eye of the public is allowed to rest on it. Many large works in this branch of art which decorate public squares and other places are of course so published; but there are others not designed for such a purpose, which could never be published in any other way than by exhibition; therefore I apprehend that these works of sculpture must be considered as ‘published’ by exhibition at such places as the Royal Academy and Manchester, so as to entitle them to the protection of the statutes from the date of such publication.”

Investitive fact.

Infringements of the right (z) are: Making or importing, or causing to be made or imported or exposed for sale, or otherwise disposed of, any pirated copy or cast of anything protected by the Act, whether by moulding, copying from, or imitating in any way the original, to the damage of the proprietor of the work so pirated.

Infringements of the right.

Remedies. after registration have been marked with the word "registered" and the date of registration; the proprietor may for every infringement after registration recover a penalty not less than £5 or more than £30; either by action or by summary proceeding before two justices having jurisdiction where the offender resides. In this case the penalty inflicted shall be leviable by distress (c).

Limitations of actions.

All actions must be brought within six months of the discovery of the offence complained of (d).

It is a condition precedent of the right and remedy that the proprietor shall put his name and the date, (what date is not clear,) on every sculpture, cast, etc., before it shall be put forth or published (e).

APPENDIX.

General recommendations of Commission as to artistic copyright.

The recommendations of the Copyright Commission as to the Law of Artistic Copyright are as follows:—

1. That the law with respect to the different branches of artistic work should be as far as possible assimilated; when distinctions are made, they are between the processes of indefinite multiplication such as photographs and engravings, and those classes of works of individual value such as paintings, drawings, and sculpture (C. C. R. §§ 94, 118).

2. That the term of copyright for all works of fine art except photographs be the life of the artist and thirty years after his death. For photographs it is to be thirty years from publication, except when part of a book, when the term of literary copyright is to apply (C. C. R. §§ 95, 119).

3. That it should be open to British subjects and aliens domiciled in the British dominions to obtain copyright in works wherever published (C. C. R. § 96).

4. That other aliens should only obtain national copyright for works first published in the British dominions (C. C. R. § 98).

5. That every form of copying sculpture, whether by sculpture, modelling, photography, drawing, engraving, or otherwise, should be considered an infringement of copyright, unless the sculpture was merely an accessory in the copying of a scene (C. C. R. § 99).

6. That copies of non-copyright statutes should be susceptible of copyright (C. C. R. § 100).

7. It being found impossible to distinguish between portraits and other pictures, or to decide what constitutes a work executed on commission, the Commission recommend that in the absence of a written agreement to the contrary the copyright in a picture or drawing (§ 117) should follow the ownership of the picture, belonging to the purchaser, or person for whom the picture is made (C. C. R. §§ 108-110, 115).

8. That the copyright in engravings or photographs should belong to the owner of the plate or negative, but in the case of works executed on commission no work should be exhibited or sold without the sanction of the person who ordered them (C. C. R. §§ 121, 122).

9. That, if he has not the power at present, an artist be empowered to sell his sketches and studies for a finished picture without infringing the copyright in the picture.

10. With regard to the registration of paintings and drawings, that it be optional so long as the property in the picture, and the copyright, are vested in the same person, but that if they are separated, registration should be compulsory.

11. That in these cases the register should contain:—

(a) The date of the agreement separating copyright.

(b) Names of parties thereto.

(c) Names and places of abode of artist and proprietor of copyright.

(d) Description of nature and subject of work, and if described, a sketch (C. C. R. § 151).

12. That registration of engravings, prints, and photographs be compulsory (C. C. R. § 159).

13. The Commission, while wishing to strengthen the power to seize piratical copies, do not feel able to recommend that a magistrate should have power to issue a search warrant for houses on evidence of reasonable cause to suspect the existence of piratical copies therein (C. C. R. § 175).

14. They recommend that power be given to seize piratical copies on the persons of hawkers, &c., by peace officers without warrant, acting under the orders and responsibility of the proprietor of copyright or his agent (C. C. R. § 178).

Besides these general recommendations as to uniformity of law in all branches of Fine Art, the Commission specially recommend with regard to engravings:—

1. That the transfer of copyright in engravings should be on the same basis as that of photographs, i.e., that the copyright in a print should belong to the owner of the plate from which it is printed, but that, in the case of engravings, &c., made on commission, no copies be sold or exhibited without the sanction of the person who ordered them (§§ 121, 122).

2. That engravings and prints be subject to compulsory registration, as in the case of books, i.e., that no action shall be brought in respect of anything made or done before registration, or in respect of any dealings after registration, with anything so made or done before registration, unless registration has been effected within a month of publication (§§ 154, 159).

3. The general provisions giving power to search for and seize piratical copies are to be applied to engravings and prints.

Recom-mendations of Commission.

The Commission, while assimilating the law as to sculpture to that of paintings and drawings, specially recommend:—

1. That every form of copying sculpture, whether by sculpture, modelling, photography, drawing, engraving, or otherwise, should be included in the protection of copyright. A proviso is added to this that if the sculpture is only copied as an accessory in a scene, such copying shall not be an infringement (C. C. R. § 99).

2. That copyright should exist in copies or casts from the antique (C. C. R. § 100).

3. That the powers to search for and seize piratical copies of sculptures should be the same as those recommended for paintings and other works of fine art (C. C. R. § 180).

The Commission therefore propose in effect the extension of copyright in sculpture; this recommendation is based mainly on the damage to the reputation of the sculptor by incorrect copying, and the money value of photographs of sculptures. I think it very doubtful however whether the entire absence of copyright in sculpture would harm anybody; the rights given are very little used at present, and copying, except by photographs, appears to be rare; while it is disputed whether copying by photographs does not benefit the artist as an advertisement more than it harms him by the pecuniary loss he may sustain.

CHAPTER VIII.

COLONIAL COPYRIGHT.

History and present position of Colonial Copyright.—Act of 1886.

ALTHOUGH the relations of the English law of Copyright to special colonial laws, and the position of colonial authors and publishers, have only as yet been brought into prominence in practice with regard to Canada, questions of importance must sooner or later arise with regard to all the colonies (a).

History
present position of colonial
copyright.

Legislation on the subject at present has the following results. The Imperial Act of 1842, in conjunction with the decision of the House of Lords in Routledge v. Low (b), provided that Imperial Copyright in books could only be secured by publication in the United Kingdom, but, when secured, extended over the whole of the British dominions (c). A colonial author publishing his book in the colony, if there was any colonial law of copyright, obtained the copyright provided by that law, which only extended over the colony of publication. If there was no colonial law, he had no protection. This was naturally a great grievance to the colonial author and publisher. But further, the colonial public suffered from the unsuitable or insufficient supply of English copyright works. The scattered population of an infant colony, lacking the distributive organizations of advanced civilization, were unable to purchase the high-priced editions which the mechanism of circulating libraries enabled English authors and publishers to issue. Yet colonial publishers were debarred from printing cheap and suitable editions of English works unless the author's consent were obtained, and were prevented from importing the cheap foreign reprints which other countries, especially the United States and Germany, provided. English publishers naturally did not consider it worth while to publish a cheap colonial edition, whose import into the United Kingdom might spoil their English market.

The special pressure of the North American colonies on these grounds led in 1847 to the passing of the Foreign Reprints Act (d), which enabled the Crown to suspend the Act of 1842 so as to admit foreign reprints into particular colonies, if proper provision were made for securing remuneration to the authors of these reprinted books, by collecting a duty or royalty on their import. Though this Act was passed to meet the special case of Canada, nineteen colonies have under it obtained the benefit of special Orders in Council, by making what were supposed to be suitable arrangements for the protection of British authors. From 1866 to 1876 (e) Canada paid to the British Government under this Act the sum of £1084 13s. 3½d., the remaining eighteen colonies only contributing £70 19s. 11d., and seven of them paying nothing at all. It is admitted that the measures for protection are absolutely inefficient, and that large numbers of reprints are smuggled in without paying duty.

attention to the unsatisfactory position of colonial authors and publishers, and the Canadian Government in 1869 proposed that Canadian publishers should be allowed to reprint the books of English authors without their consent, on paying them a royalty of 12½ per cent. on the published price. After much discussion however this proposal fell to the ground, and in 1875 the Canadian Legislature passed a Copyright Act giving power to any person domiciled either in Canada or any part of the British dominions, or in any country having a copyright treaty with Great Britain, to obtain copyright in Canada for twenty-eight years, with a second term of fourteen years by either publication or republication of his work in Canada. This colonial copyright was concurrent, but not co-terminous, with the imperial right. Under the Act, up to November 1876, thirty-one works of British authors were published with their consent in Canada, at a price not only far lower than that of the English copyright edition, but also lower than that of the competing reprints from the United States, which were thus practically excluded from Canada.

In consequence of doubts as to the effect of the Imperial Act of 1842 on the Canadian Act, a special English Act in 1878 gave power to her Majesty to assent to the Canadian Act (g); and, a question having arisen as to whether these Canadian reprints should be allowed to enter the United Kingdom, a clause was added prohibiting such foreign imports.

Colonial copyright has received a considerable extension from the International Act of 1886 (h), which provides that the English Copyright Acts shall apply to a literary or artistic work first produced in a British possession in like manner as they apply to a work first produced in the United Kingdom. It follows that a book produced in the Australian colonies obtains at once the same copyright throughout the British dominions that it would have enjoyed if first produced in England (i). It is not clear that the author of a work of art is in a similar happy position; if his work had been first produced in the United Kingdom, he would have obtained under the Act of 1862 (k) a copyright unlimited by the section conferring it, but limited in its remedies to the United Kingdom (l). But if the author is a British subject, or resident within the dominions of the Crown, he has already such a copyright under the Act of 1862 (m), without need of having recourse to the Act of 1886. The Act of 1862 did not give colonial works of art copyright in other colonies; and the Act of 1886 cannot therefore do so, unless the provision at the end of s. 9 of the Act of 1886: "that this Act shall apply to every British possession as if it were part of the United Kingdom" can be construed as extending the copyright conferred by the Act of 1862 in the case of colonial works of art, to the British dominions, a construction which seems strained and improbable. It seems to follow that the Act of 1886 gives nothing to artistic works produced in the colonies that they had not already.

If the colonial law provides for registration of literary or artistic works, the English provisions as to registration are not to apply (n), and duly certified extracts from the Colonial Register are to be admissible in evidence in English Courts (o). No copies of any colonial book

History of International copyright.

Until the year 1886, International Copyright in England, that is to say, copyright in works first published out of the British dominions, rested on an Act of 1844 (a), under which the Queen was empowered by Order in Council to extend to literary or artistic works first published in any foreign country the benefits of the English Copyright Acts on certain terms and for certain periods specified in the Act and Orders in Council made under it. In pursuance of these provisions a large number of Orders in Council were promulgated (b), and the various European countries had also numerous copyright treaties inter se. This resulted in considerable complications, the rights of an author in foreign countries varying according to the particular treaty or Order in Council with that country, and in 1886 an attempt was made by several of the great powers of Europe to secure uniformity through their dominions. A conference was summoned at Berne, which resulted in the signature on September 5, 1887, of an agreement known as the "Berne Convention" (c). In anticipation of this agreement power had been obtained from Parliament by an Act of 1886 (d), enabling the Queen to issue Orders in Council embodying the chief features of the new convention, and on November 28, 1887, an Order in Council was issued (e), which is to be construed as if it formed part of the Act of 1886 (f), and which came into operation on December 8, 1887 (g). This order adopted in full the Berne Convention (h), a translation of which is incorporated in a schedule; and repealed all the existing Orders in Council (i), which are also enumerated in a schedule (k). The result is that, in the countries whose governments are parties to the Berne Convention, a comparatively uniform system of International Copyright now prevails.

The system established by the Act of 1886, the Order in Council of November 28, 1887, and the Berne Convention of September 5, 1887, is the following.

It applies to the following countries: The British Empire (l), Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Luxembourg (m), Tunis and Hayti, which are called the "Copyright Union" (n).

Rights of foreign authors in British dominions.

The rights of foreign authors in the British dominions rest upon the Order in Council of November 27, 1887, which incorporates the Berne Convention (o), and is made under the authority of the Act of 1886 (p). The rights of English authors in the foreign countries of the Copyright Union rest upon the Berne Convention, together with any legislation which has been found necessary in any particular country to give effect to that convention, similar to the English Act of 1886.

The author of any literary or artistic work (q) first produced after December 6, 1887, in one of these countries has, subject to the provisions of the International Copyright Acts, the Order in Council, and the Convention, the same copyright in the British dominions (r) as if the work had been first produced in the United Kingdom (s).

In the case of literary or artistic works first produced before December 6, 1887, in one of these foreign countries, such works are the subject of copyright as if the International Copyright Acts and Order in Council had been in force at the date of their production, without prejudice to the rights of any person who has before December 6, 1887, lawfully (t) produced any such work in the United Kingdom (u). Thus if a French author published a book in 1880, in France, he will under the Order in Council have English copyright as if the order had applied to France in 1880. But if the French author took no steps to protect his copyright in England, and an English publisher published the work in 1885, it would seem that such a publisher would be allowed to continue selling his edition after December 6, 1887, and apparently that he might publish further editions; but an English publisher would not be allowed to publish the book for the first time in 1888, because it could have been published before 1886 (x).

The duration of this copyright will be for either the English period of copyright or that in the country where it is produced, whichever is the shortest (y).

The person entitled to this copyright will be the author or his assigns, or in cases where the author is not a subject or citizen of any of the foreign countries of the Copyright Union, the publisher shall, for the purposes of any legal proceedings in the United Kingdom, be deemed to be entitled to the copyright as if he were the author, but without prejudice to the rights of such author and publisher between themselves (z).

The extent of this copyright is throughout the British dominions (a), the nature of the right being that existing in the United Kingdom (b), (and not according to colonial statutes).

The 4th section of the Act of 1886 provides that the provisions of the International Copyright Acts as to registration and delivery of copies of works shall only apply so far as is provided by the Order in Council. The Order in Council contains no such provision, and the provisions of the International Copyright Acts as

The provisions relating to the proof of the existence of copyright in a foreign plaintiff suing under the Order in Council of November 28, 1887, are a little obscure and are to be gathered from s. 7 of the Act of 1886; s. 3 of the Order in Council, and ss. 2 and 11 of the Berne Convention (d).

(c) Some doubt has been expressed as to the meaning of this provision, which is certainly obscure. The "International Copyright Acts," as defined in the Act of 1886, are 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 12; and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, s. 12; and the provisions of those Acts with regard to the registry and delivery of copies are to be found in 7 Vict. c. 12, ss. 6-9. Sect. 6 especially provides for a registration and delivery of one copy of the foreign work. This proviso by the joint operation of 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, s. 6, and the Order in Council of November 28, 1887, does not apply; but it has been suggested that as a foreign work is to have the same rights as if produced in the United Kingdom, the provisions of the English Acts as to registration and delivery of copies must still apply. This suggestion, if accurate, would make the position of the foreign author worse under the new Order than under the old system; but it is submitted it is inaccurate. It is clear that the provisions of the International Act of 1844 as to registration and delivery of copies superseded the separate provisions of the various Copyright Acts whose benefits were extended to foreign works by the Act of 1844, and that, having complied with the International provisions as to registration and delivery of copies, it was not further necessary to comply with the English provisions also. It follows that where the International Act of 1886 dispenses with the International provisions as to registration altogether, it is no more necessary now than it was under the Act of 1844 to comply with the more onerous English provisions.

(d) By s. 3 of the Order in Council, the foreign author shall have the same rights as if the work had been first produced in the United Kingdom; but this, as has been seen (note c, ante), does not impose on him the necessity of registering under the English Copyright Acts. By s. 2 of the Convention, the enjoyment of these rights is subject to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by law in the country of origin of the work; and by s. 11 it is provided that an author whose name is indicated on the work, (in anonymous works, the publisher), in the accustomed manner shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be considered as such, and be consequently admitted to institute proceedings against pirates before the Courts of the various countries of the Union: provided that if necessary the tribunals may require production of a certificate from the competent authority to the effect that the formalities prescribed by law in the country of origin have been accomplished. And s. 7 of the Act of 1886 appears to provide for the authentication and reception in English Courts of certificates for this purpose. It would seem that a foreign author provided with a certificate, duly authenticated under s. 7 of the Act of 1886, of compliance with the conditions and formalities prescribed by law in the country of origin is certainly entitled to sue; but it would also seem under s. 11 of the Convention that the mere fact of his name appearing as author on the work will throw upon the other side the burden of proving that the conditions and formalities of the country of origin have not been complied with. In the same way, it is submitted that an English author will be perfectly safe in suing in a foreign Court with a certificate of his registration at Stationers' Hall according to the appropriate English Act; but that under Article 11 of the Convention the mere fact of his name appearing as author on the work will throw on the other side the burden of proving that he has not complied with the formalities required by English law.

Foreign authors have also the right for ten years after the first publication of their book in the foreign countries of the Copyright Union of preventing the production in or importation into the British dominions (e) of any unauthorized translation of his work. If at the end of ten years he has not published an authorized translation (f) in the English language, he loses this right; but if he has published such a translation the right is coexistent with his copyright.

History of International copyright.

An author or artist publishing his literary or artistic work for the first time in the United Kingdom has, in every other country of the Copyright Union, the same right as the law of that country gives to natives (g).

rights which, say the French law, would give a native of France in his work if published in the United Kingdom, which is, perhaps the literal meaning of the clause of the Convention, or the same rights which the French law would give a native of France in his work if published in France. This latter, is the construction put upon the Convention as applicable to England by the Order in Council (h), but the language of the Convention, which has diplomatic vagueness rather than legal precision, is not fortunately chosen to express this meaning, which was no doubt intended.

To enjoy these rights the British author must accomplish the conditions and formalities prescribed by law in the country of origin, i.e. the United Kingdom (i). This, I suppose, means that he must register and deliver copies as required by the appropriate English Statutes (k).

The duration of this right is the same as that provided by the law of the country of origin; if the work is simultaneously published in several countries, that in which the shortest term of protection is accorded by law, is treated as the country of origin. The right extends throughout the countries which are parties to the Copyright Union, and their colonies or foreign possessions, if such country has declared its accession to the Convention in respect of its colonies.

Works published by English authors before the date of the Convention, have, subject to any restrictive provisions made or to be made under the Convention (l) the same rights as if the Convention had been in force at the date of their first publication (m).

English authors have also the right for ten years after first publication of their work of preventing any translation of their work from being produced in any of the countries of the Copyright Union (n); and if within the ten years an authorized translation is published, they have the further right of preventing translations for the rest of their term of copyright (o). If no such translation has been published it is open to any person to produce a translation of the work.

History of International copyright.

The only provisions as to registration and delivery of copies, appear to be those requiring compliance with the formalities of the country of origin (p). The question of proof of copyright in a foreign country has already been dealt with (q).

The preceding pages have dealt with our relations with countries with whom we have International Copyright on the basis of International Conventions. But a few, amongst whom unfortunately is that nation which makes most use of the works of British authors, the United States, refuse to protect the works of foreign authors, or, in other words, to recognise International Copyright (r).

The
question.

From the point of view of the interests of the community at large, when a nation says, as the United States practically do say, that they do not consider it to their interest to recognise literary property in the works of foreign authors published abroad, it will serve no useful purpose to indulge in rhetorical sentences about "national robbery," or "national dishonesty"; we can only endeavour to shew that such a nation has mistaken its true interests, and is in reality injuring instead of benefiting itself. And as on a superficial view of the matter the United States do not seem to be suffering from their copyright policy, we have to inquire more carefully into the conditions of the problem, and to try to discover an acceptable compromise between the two nations.

Present
position of the United States on the question.

The position of affairs in the United States is as follows. They recognise national copyright, although a branch of the vigorous opposition to property in inventions and to the patent law also attacks even domestic literary property. Indeed, they are even more liberal than England in their recognition of some classes of works published abroad; for instance, copyright can be obtained in the United States, though not in England, for a play that has been previously publicly represented abroad, but not printed. But with regard to the works of foreigners printed abroad, there is no protection; any one may publish them in the States without any payment to the author, and there is no local copyright of any kind in them even when published by an United States citizen. As a consequence, the United States are flooded with cheap reprints of successful English works; and, although the actual cost of production of a book is greater in the States than in England, English competition is rendered practically impossible by several causes (s):—

- (1.) Books imported into the States pay an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent.
- (2.) A British publisher pays his author, while an

(s) C. C. Ev. q. 1277, evidence of Mr. Murray.

American republisher of English works is free from this item of expenditure.

(3.) The American publisher is saved the expense of corrections in proofs, said to be 40 per cent. of the whole cost of printing in England, by his ability to reprint direct from the printed book.

(4.) The American publisher has not the speculative risks which the English publisher has to allow for; he can choose the works he will publish by the test of actual success, instead of having to guess at the effect they will produce on the public.

These four causes enable American publishers to issue reprints of English copyright works at a price far below that at which they are issued in England, though this price is not apparently lower, and indeed generally higher than the ultimate price of a really successful work in England. In the case of books copyrighted in the States, the price appears to be about the same as that of the original English editions of similar works. This however does not apply in the case of works such as novels, to which the peculiar English system of circulating libraries attaches an entirely fictitious price. At any rate, English reprints are far cheaper than original American works.

To this pecuniary advantage in competition there must be ascribed to a certain extent as a result the undoubted fact that English reprints are on the average better as literary works than the American originals. Publishers cannot afford to pay authors highly when the works they publish have to compete with books produced by a system which offers greater attractions to authors to write, but published at a price which does not include any remuneration to those authors. It is said by Americans that a publisher expects to lose money over the first work he publishes of any unknown author (t). Where there is such small lucrative demand for literary work there will naturally be slight literary work produced. It will not pay the best men to devote their time to literature, and so the average literary standard will be lower. Sir Julius Benedict (u) suggested that the failure of America to produce any original musician is probably partly due to the fact that, owing to the enormous competition of foreign music, as to which the foreign author has not the protection of copyright, no sufficient remuneration can be offered to the home producer. In literature, one of the best educated people in the world, and one of the largest reading populations, yet can shew very few names of more than third-class merit in the different branches of literary production. Indeed, so far back as 1833 a report (x) was made by Mr. Clay to the United States Government as to the injury done to American literature by the competition of English reprints, which, he said, made the trades of publishing and of writing American literature almost impossibilities. This then is one serious evil, resulting from the present system, which the United States must consider, and accept responsibility for, if they continue such a system.

"courtesy"
of the
book trade.

Before however dealing with the position that the American nation or its specially interested classes take up in this controversy, it will be well to examine the actual working of the present American book trade. At first there was unlimited competition, house outbidding house in the cheapness of the edition it offered. "The state of Nature was a state of War;” but as in Hobbes’ world, so here, in practice the evils of a state of war were felt, and a “Social Compact” of an indefinite kind was come to among the leading houses. By this “courtesy of the trade” (y) it was understood that the house first publishing a reprint of any foreign work should be left in undisturbed possession, without competitive issues from the other houses. This appeared only to apply to the larger firms, and there were in consequence perpetual piracies by the small, and occasional quarrels among the larger houses. But the fact remains that the interest of publishers established a species of International Copyright in practice, although the author did not necessarily obtain anything by it. This system however brought some small return to the author; for it became the interest of the American publisher to secure as early as possible “advance-sheets” of any English work likely to be popular, and for these advance-sheets he was willing to pay the English author or publisher sums which occasionally formed an adequate remuneration for the foreign circulation. For instance (z), £300 was paid for the advance-sheets of a novel by an author of very moderate capacity; £1000 was paid to Livingstone’s family for the advance-sheets of his ‘Last Journals,’ and Mr. Putnam (a), a member of one of the leading publishing firms of New York, said before the Commission that the average payment for advance-sheets was from £25 to £100, and that the price increased considerably between 1871 and 1876. Mr. Herbert Spencer (b) obtained fair remuneration for his American circulation, Messrs. Appleton, his publishers, being protected by the "courtesy of the trade;" Professor Tyndall (c) and Dr. Huxley obtained a percentage in a similar way. On the other hand, many English authors, especially Mr. Tennyson, Mr. Charles Reade, and our most popular poets and novelists, received no return from the circulation of their works in the States. Canon Farrar (d) received £50 for the advance-sheets of his 'Life of Christ,' of which a small American firm immediately issued a competing edition; and Mr. Matthew Arnold (e) only obtained in return for a large circulation of his works, the sum of £50 from American publishers. The publishers who made arrangements as to advance-sheets could also obtain stereotyped plates, and blocks for engravings, and thus had an advantage over their rivals (f). Being houses of considerable capital and power, they could seriously injure smaller rivals by competition; the fear of this protected most of their issues from the small houses, the "courtesy of the trade" from the larger ones.

The fear of the competition of the smaller houses did not, however, long restrain the small American publishers. A generation arose who had no "courtesy," and who did not see the beauty of "honourable understandings," and in the form of Riverside and Lakeside Libraries, and other attractive titles, they published everybody's books right and left, paying no heed to priority of publication or the competing and answering editions of their rivals. This course of universal revenge was likely to end in universal ruin, and American publishers gladly welcomed a prospect of peace and security in publishing.

American authors had long been of the same opinion, for it was all but impossible for a man in America to live by literature alone, in face of the competition which his poor books must struggle against from English works produced at enormous advantage.

One formidable interest remained to be conciliated. The printers were represented by the Typographical Union, an organization most powerful in lobbying and other occult arts; and they feared that if copyright could be acquired by English authors, the American demand for English works would be supplied by English-printed editions, and the great employment of American printers would be gone. They were enabled to gild this private interest with the attractive covering of a desire for the public weal, pointing out to the American public, which is used to and likes its (English) books cheap, that a monopoly to English editions would mean an enormous increase in price, and the adoption of the fictitious values induced by the English circulating library. From these motives and with these arguments, the Typographical Union was powerful enough to stay all legislation.

One proposal to meet the difficulty was a royalty system, by which any publisher might produce an English work on paying a certain royalty to the author, and a curious system of stamps was devised to carry out this arrangement. But though this gave the author some return, it gave the publisher no security from competing editions, and as it aroused no enthusiasm in anybody, it failed to achieve any success.

Another suggestion, more fortunate, obtained the approval of the Typographical Union, and being embodied in the Chase Bill, passed the Senate, and was only rejected by a comparatively small majority, chiefly from the Western States, in the House of Representatives. By the proposals of the Chase Bill, any English author would obtain copyright in the United States, provided that, before first publication of his work anywhere, he delivered to the Librarian of Congress at Washington two copies of his work, printed from type set within the limits of the United States. The last proviso was the sop to the American printers, and inasmuch as any proposed legislation without some such protection of the American printing interest will certainly be opposed by the Typographical Union, it seems that at least the first instalment of International Copyright granted by the United States will be granted on those lines. The result of such a measure on English industry would be that, as an American edition must be printed in the United States to secure American copyright, the English demand would probably be supplied by part of that American edition. The author would not go to the expense of two printings and publishings, where one would suffice.

But International Copyright with the United States is, after the rejection of the Chase Bill, still a dream of the future.

An Act to amend the Law relating to International Copyright.

[10th May, 1844.]

WHEREAS by an Act (1 & 2 Vict. c. 59), hereinafter designated as "the International Copyright Act," Her Majesty was empowered by (c) See Chap. IX., ante, and 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, post.

Order in Council to direct that the Authors of Books which should after a future Time, to be specified in such Order in Council, be published in any Foreign Country, to be specified in such Order in Council, and their Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, should have the sole Liberty of printing and reprinting such Books within the British Dominions for such Term as Her Majesty should by such Order in Council direct, not exceeding the Term which Authors, being British Subjects, were then, (that is to say) at the Time of passing the said Act, entitled to in respect of Books first published in the United Kingdom; and the said Act contains divers Enactments securing to Authors and their Representatives the Copyright in the Books to which any such Order in Council should extend: And whereas an Act (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45) was passed, designated as "the Copyright Amendment Act," repealing various Acts therein mentioned relating to the Copyright of printed Books, and extending, defining, and securing to Authors and their Representatives the Copyright of Books: And whereas an Act was passed (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 15), hereinafter designated as "the Dramatic Literary Property Act," whereby the sole Liberty of representing or causing to be represented any Dramatic Piece in any Place of Dramatic Entertainment in any Part of the British Dominions, which should be composed and not printed or published by the Author thereof or his Assignee, was secured to such Author or his Assignee; and by the said Act it was enacted, that the Author of any such production which should thereafter be printed and published, or his Assignee, should have the like sole Liberty of Representation until the End of Twenty-eight Years from the first Publication thereof: And whereas by the said Copyright Amendment Act, the Provisions of the said Dramatic Literary Property Act and of the said Copyright Amendment Act were made applicable to Musical Compositions; and it was thereby also enacted, that the sole Liberty of representing or performing, or causing or permitting to be represented or performed, in any Part of the British Dominions, any Dramatic Piece or Musical Composition, should endure and be the Property of the Author thereof and his Assigns for the Term in the said Copyright Amendment Act provided for the Duration of the Copyright in Books, and that the Provisions therein enacted in respect of the Property of such Copyright should apply to the Liberty of representing or performing any Dramatic Piece or Musical Composition: And whereas under the Four several Acts next mentioned; viz. 8 Geo. 2, c. 13, 7 Geo. 3, c. 38, 17 Geo. 3, c. 57, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 59; hereinafter designated as the Engraving Copyright Acts, every Person who invents or designs, engraves, etches, or works in Mezzotinto or Chiaro-oscuro, or from his own Work, Design, or Invention causes or procures to be designed, engraved, etched, or worked in Mezzotinto or Chiaro-oscuro any historical Print or Prints, or any Print or Prints of any Portrait, Conversation, Landscape, or Architecture, Map, Chart, or Plan, or any other Print or Prints whatsoever, and every Person who engraves, etches, or works in Mezzotinto or Chiaroscuro, or causes to be engraved, etched, or worked, any Print taken from any Picture, Drawing, Model, or Sculpture, either ancient or modern, notwithstanding such Print shall not have been graven or drawn from the original Design of such Graver, Etcher, or Draftsman, is entitled to the Copyright of such Print for the Term of Twenty-eight Years from the first publishing thereof; and by the said several Engraving Copyright Acts it is provided that the Name of the Proprietor shall be truly engraved on each Plate, and printed on every such Print, and Remedies are provided for the Infringement of such Copyright; And whereas under an Act (38 Geo. 3, c. 71), and an Act (54 Geo. 3, c. 56) (which Acts are hereinafter designated as the Sculpture Copyright Acts), every Person who makes or causes to be made any new and original Sculpture, or Model or Copy or Cast of the Human Figure, any Bust or Part of the Human Figure clothed in Drapery or otherwise, any Animal or Part of any Animal combined with the Human Figure or otherwise, any Subject, being Matter of Invention in Sculpture, any Alto or Basso Relievo, representing any of the Matters aforesaid, or any Cast from Nature of the Human Figure or Part thereof, or of any Animal or Part thereof, or of any such Subject representing any of the Matters aforesaid, whether separate or combined, is entitled to the Copyright in such new and original Sculpture, Model, Copy, and Cast, for Fourteen Years from first putting forth and publishing the same, and for an additional Period of Fourteen Years in case the original Maker is living at the End of the first Period; and by the said Acts it is provided that the Name of the Proprietor, with the Date of the Publication thereof, is to be put on all such Sculptures, Models, Copies, and Casts, and Remedies are provided for the Infringement of such Copyright: And whereas the Powers vested in Her Majesty by the said International Copyright Act are insufficient to enable Her Majesty to confer upon Authors of Books first published in Foreign Countries Copyright of the like Duration, and with the like Remedies for the Infringement thereof, which are conferred and provided by the said Copyright Amendment Act with respect to Authors of Books first published in the British Dominions; and the said International Copyright Act does not empower Her Majesty to confer any exclusive Right of representing or performing Dramatic Pieces or Musical Compositions first published in Foreign Countries upon the Authors thereof, nor to extend the Privilege of Copyright to Prints and Sculptures first published abroad; and it is expedient to vest increased Powers in Her Majesty in this respect, and for that Purpose to repeal the said International Copyright Act, and to give such other Powers to Her Majesty, and to make such further Provisions, as are hereinafter contained: Be it enacted, That the International Copyright Act shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

ADDENDUM.

By an oversight, the Copyright (Musical Compositions) Act, 1888, was omitted, in revising this edition. It is now inserted in the Appendix (p. 246). The following alterations in the text are necessary:—

Sections 2 and 3 should be noted on p. 100. The minimum penalty by way of damages that could be given was formerly forty shillings; the penalty or damages may now be nominal.

Section 3 should also be noted on p. 96; the judge has now power over the costs in every case.

Sections 4 and 5 should be noted on p. 89. Knowledge that the performance of a musical composition, other than an opera or stage play, is without the authority of the owner of the copyright, is now necessary to render the proprietor or lessee of any place where such a performance takes place liable for a penalty or damages in respect of such performance.

WHEREAS a Convention, of which an English translation is set out in the First Schedule to this Order (u), has been concluded between Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the foreign countries named in this Order, with respect to the protection to be given by copyright to the authors of literary and artistic works :

Belgium, France, Germany, Hayti, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Tunis (x) :

And WHEREAS Her Majesty in Council is satisfied (y) that the foreign countries named in this Order have made such provisions as it appears to Her Majesty expedient to require for the protection of authors of works first produced in Her Majesty's dominions.

(2.) This Order shall extend to the foreign countries following, that is to say :

Belgium, France, Germany, Hayti, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Tunis (z).

(3.) The author of a literary or artistic work which, on or after the commencement of this Order (a), is first produced in one of the foreign countries of the Copyright Union shall, subject as in this Order and in the International Copyright Acts, 1845 to 1886, mentioned, have as respects that work throughout Her Majesty's dominions the same right of copyright, including any right capable of being conferred by an Order in Council under section 2 or section 5 of the International Copyright Act, 1844, or under any other enactment, as if the work had been first produced in the United Kingdom, and shall have such right during the same period:

Provided that the author of a literary or artistic work shall not have any greater right or longer term of copyright therein, than that which he enjoys in the country in which the work is first produced.

The author of any literary or artistic work first produced before the commencement of this Order shall have the rights and remedies to which he is entitled under section 6 of the International Copyright Act, 1886.

The rights conferred by the International Copyright Acts, 1844 to 1886, shall, in the case of a literary or artistic work first produced in one of the foreign countries of the Copyright Union by an author who is not a subject or citizen of any of the said foreign countries, be limited as follows, that is to say, the author shall not be entitled to take legal proceedings in Her Majesty's dominions for protecting any copyright in such work, but the publisher of such work shall, for the purpose of any legal proceedings in Her Majesty's dominions for protecting any copyright in such work, be deemed to be entitled to such copyright as if he were the author, but without prejudice to the rights of such author and publisher as between themselves.

(5.) A literary or artistic work first produced simultaneously in two or more countries of the Copyright Union shall be deemed for the purpose of copyright to have been first produced in that one of those countries in which the term of copyright in such work is shortest.

(6.) Section 6 of the International Copyright Act, 1852, shall not apply to any dramatic piece to which protection is extended by virtue of this Order (b).

(7.) The Orders mentioned in the Second Schedule to this Order are hereby revoked.

Provided that neither such revocation nor anything else in this Order shall prejudicially affect any right acquired or accrued before the commencement of this Order, by virtue of any Order hereby revoked, and any person entitled to such right shall continue entitled thereto, and to the remedies for the same, in like manner as if this Order had not been made.

(a) By s. 9, post, December 6th, 1887.

(b) See Convention, Art. 10.

BERNE CONVENTION.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

Copyright Convention.

Convention for protecting effectually and in as uniform a manner as possible the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works, made on the 5th of September, 1887, between Her Majesty The Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India; His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia; His Majesty the King of the Belgians; Her Majesty the Queen Regent of Spain, in the name of His Catholic Majesty the King of Spain; the President of the French Republic; the President of the Republic of Haiti; His Majesty the King of Italy; the Federal Council of the Swiss Federation; His Highness the Bey of Tunis.

(The following is an English Translation of the Convention, with the omission of the formal beginning and end.)

ARTICLE 1.

The contracting States are constituted into a Union for the protection of the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works.

ARTICLE 2.

Authors of any of the countries of the Union, or their lawful representatives, shall enjoy in the other countries for their works, whether published in one of those countries or unpublished, the rights which the respective laws do now or may hereafter grant to natives.

The enjoyment of these rights is subject to the accomplishment of the conditions and formalities prescribed by law in the country of origin of the work, and cannot exceed in the other countries the term of protection accorded in the said country of origin.

The country of origin of the work is that in which the work is first published, or if such publication takes place simultaneously in several countries of the Union, that one of them in which the shortest term of protection is accorded by law (c).

For unpublished works the country to which the author belongs is considered the country of origin of the work.

ARTICLE 3.

The stipulations of the present Convention apply equally to the publishers of literary and artistic works published in one of the countries of the Union, but of which the authors belong to a country which is not a party to the Union.

ARTICLE 4.

The expression "literary and artistic works" comprehends books, pamphlets, and all other writings; dramatic or dramatico-musical works, musical compositions with or without words; works of design, painting, sculpture, and engraving; lithographs, illustrations, geographical charts, plans, sketches, and plastic works relative to geography, topography, architecture, or science in general; in fact every production whatsoever in the literary, scientific, or artistic domain which can be published by any mode of impression or reproduction.

ARTICLE 5.

Authors of any of the countries of the Union, or their lawful representatives, shall enjoy in the other countries exclusive rights of making or authorizing the translation of their works until the expiration of ten years from the publication of the original work in one of the countries of the Union (d).

For works published in incomplete parts ("livraisons") the period of ten years commences from the date of publication of the last part of the original work.

For works composed of several volumes, as well as for bulletins or collections ("cahiers") published by literary or scientific societies or by private persons, each volume, bulletin, or collection, is, with regard to the period of ten years, considered as a separate work.

In the cases provided for by the present Article, and for the calculation of the period of protection, the 31st December of the year in which the work was published is admitted as the date of publication.

ARTICLE 6.

Authorized translations are protected as original works. They consequently enjoy the protection stipulated in Articles 2 and 3 as regards their unauthorized reproduction in the countries of the Union.

(c) But cf., 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, s. 3, sub-s. 2.

(d) Cf., 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, s. 5.

It is understood that in the case of a work for which the translating right has fallen into the public domain, the translator cannot oppose the translation of the same work by other writers.

ARTICLE 7.

Articles from newspapers or periodicals published in any of the countries of the Union may be reproduced in original or in translation in the other countries of the Union, unless the authors or publishers have expressly forbidden it. For periodicals it is sufficient if the prohibition is made in a general manner at the beginning of each number of the periodical.

This prohibition cannot in any case apply to articles of political discussion, or to the reproduction of news of the day or current topics.

ARTICLE 8.

As regards the liberty of extracting portions from literary or artistic works for use in publications destined for educational or scientific purposes, or for chrestomathies (e), the matter is to be decided by the legislation of the different countries of the Union, or by special arrangements existing or to be concluded between them.

ARTICLE 9.

The stipulations of Article 2 apply to the public representation of dramatic or dramatico-musical works whether such works be published or not.

Authors of dramatic or dramatico-musical works, or their lawful representatives, are during the existence of their exclusive right of translation, equally protected against the unauthorized public representation of their works.

The stipulations of Article 2 apply equally to the public performance of unpublished musical works, or of published works in which the author has expressly declared on the title-page or commencement of the work that he forbids the public performance.

ARTICLE 10.

Unauthorized indirect appropriations of a literary or artistic work, of various kinds, such as adaptations, arrangements of music, &c., are specially included among the illicit reproductions to which the present Convention applies, when they are only a reproduction of a particular work, in the same form, or in another form, with non-essential alterations, additions, or abridgments, so made as not to confer the character of a new original work (f).

(e) "A collection of choice passages from an author or authors": see Murray's Dictionary, sub voce.

(f) See Order in Council, s. 6, and 15 Vict. c. 12, s. 6.

It is agreed that in the application of the present Article, the tribunals of the various countries of the Union, will, if there is occasion, conform themselves to the provisions of their respective laws.

ARTICLE 11.

In order that the authors of works protected by the present Convention shall, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be considered as such, and be consequently admitted to institute proceedings against pirates before the Courts of the various countries of the Union, it will be sufficient that their name be indicated on the work in the accustomed manner.

For anonymous or pseudonymous works, the publisher whose name is indicated on the work is entitled to protect the rights belonging to the author. He is, without other proof, reputed the lawful representative of the anonymous or pseudonymous author.

It is, nevertheless, agreed that the tribunals may, if necessary, require the production of a certificate from the competent authority to the effect that the formalities prescribed by law in the country of origin, have been accomplished, as contemplated in Article 2 (g).

ARTICLE 12.

Pirated works may be seized on importation into those countries of the Union where the original work enjoys protection.

The seizure shall take place conformably to the domestic law of each state (h).

ARTICLE 13.

It is understood that the provisions of the present Convention cannot in any way derogate from the right belonging to the Government of each country of the Union to permit, to control, or to prohibit, by measures of domestic legislation or police, the circulation, representation, or exhibition of any works or productions in regard to which the competent authority may find it necessary to exercise that right.

ARTICLE 14.

Under the reserves and conditions to be determined by common agreement, the present Convention applies to all works which at the moment of its coming into force have not yet fallen into the public domain in the country of origin.

(g) See 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, s. 7, et ante, pp. 246-249.

(h) See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 17; 7 Vict. c. 12, s. 10; 15 Vict. c. 12, s. 9; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68, ss. 6, 10, 11; and the Customs Act, 1876, ss. 42, 44; and notice thereunder, London Gazette, May 1st, 1888.

ARTICLE 15.

It is understood that the Governments of the countries of the Union reserve to themselves respectively the right to enter into separate and particular arrangements between each other, provided always that such arrangements confer upon authors or their lawful representatives more extended rights than those granted by the Union, or embody other stipulations not contrary to the present Convention.

ARTICLE 16.

An International Office is established under the name of the "Office of the International Union for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works."

This office, of which the expenses will be borne by the Administrations of all the countries of the Union, is placed under the high authority of the Superior Administration of the Swiss Confederation, and works under its direction. The functions of this office are determined by common accord between the countries of the Union.

ARTICLE 17.

The present Convention may be submitted to revisions in order to introduce therein amendments calculated to perfect the system of the Union.

Questions of this kind, as well as those which are of interest to the Union in other respects, will be considered in Conferences to be held successively in the countries of the Union by delegates of the said countries.

It is understood that no alteration in the present Convention shall be binding on the Union except by the unanimous consent of the countries composing it.

ARTICLE 18.

Countries which have not become parties to the present Convention, and which grant by their domestic law protection of rights secured by this Convention, shall be admitted to accede thereto on request to that effect.

Such accession shall be notified in writing to the Government of the Swiss Confederation, who will communicate it to all the other countries of the Union.

Such accession shall imply full adhesion to all the clauses and admission to all the advantages provided by the present Convention (i).

(i) Luxembourg has adhered to the Convention under this article: see Order in Council, August 14th, 1888, and Monaco: see Order in Council, October 15th, 1889.

ARTICLE 19.

Countries acceding to the present Convention shall also have the right of acceding thereto at any time for their Colonies or foreign possessions.

They may do this either by a general declaration comprehending all their Colonies or possessions within the accession, or, by specially naming those comprised therein, or by simply indicating those which are excluded (k).

ARTICLE 20.

The present Convention shall be put in force three months after the exchange of the ratifications, and shall remain in effect for an indefinite period until the termination of a year from the date on which it may have been denounced.

Such denunciation shall be made to the Government authorized to receive accessions, and shall only be effective as regards the country making it, the Convention remaining in full force and effect for the other countries of the Union.

ARTICLE 21.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged at Berne, within the space of one year at the latest.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE.

The Convention concluded this day in no wise affects the maintenance of existing Conventions between the Contracting States, provided always that such Conventions confer on authors, or their lawful representatives, rights more extended than those secured by the Union, or contain other stipulations which are not contrary to the said Convention.

FINAL PROTOCOL.

(1.) As regards Article 4, it is agreed that those Countries of the Union where the character of artistic works is not refused to photographs, engage to admit them to the benefits of the Convention concluded to-day from the date of its coming into effect. They are, however, not bound to protect the authors of such works further than is permitted by their own legislation except in the case of international engagements already existing, or which may hereafter be entered into by them.

It is understood that an authorized photograph of a protected work of art shall enjoy legal protection in all the countries of the Union, as contemplated by the said Convention for the same period as the principal right of reproduction of the work itself subsists, and within the limits of private arrangements between those who have legal rights.

(2.) As regards Article 9 it is agreed that those countries of the Union whose legislation implicitly includes choregraphic works amongst dramatico-musical works, expressly admit the former works to the benefits of the Convention concluded this day.

It is, however, understood that questions which may arise on the application of this clause shall rest within the competence of the respective tribunals to decide.

(3.) It is understood that the manufacture and sale of instruments for the mechanical reproduction of musical airs which are copyright (l), shall not be considered as constituting an infringement of musical copyright.

(4.) The common agreement alluded to in Article 14 of the Convention, is established as follows:—

The application of the Convention to works which have not fallen into the public domain at the time when it comes into force, shall operate according to the stipulations on this head which may be contained in special Conventions either existing or to be concluded.

In the absence of such stipulations between any countries of the Union, the respective countries shall regulate, each for itself, by its domestic legislation, the manner in which the principle contained in Article 14 is to be applied (m).

(5.) The organisation of the international office established in virtue of Article 16 of the Convention, shall be fixed by a regulation which shall be drawn up by the Government of the Swiss Confederation.

The official language of the international office shall be French.

The International Office will collect all kinds of information relative to the protection of the rights of authors over their literary and artistic works. It will arrange and publish such information. It will study questions of general utility likely to be of interest to the Union, and, by the aid of documents placed at its disposal by the different Administrations, will edit a periodical publication in the French language treating questions which concern the Union. The Governments of the countries of the Union reserve to themselves the faculty of authorizing by common accord the publication by the office of an addition in one or more other languages, if experience should show this to be requisite.

The International Office will always hold itself at the disposal of members of the Union, with the view to furnish them with any special information they may require relative to the protection of literary and artistic works.

The Administration of a country where a Conference is about to be held, will prepare the programme of the Conference with the assistance of the International Office.

(l) I.e., Barrel organs.

(m) 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33. s. 6.

The director of the International Office will attend the sittings of the Conferences, and will take part in the discussions without a deliberative voice.

He will make an annual report on his administration, which shall be communicated to all the members of the Union.

The expenses of the International Union shall be shared by the contracting States. Unless a fresh arrangement be made, they cannot exceed a sum of 60,000 francs a year. This sum may be increased by the decision of one of the Conferences provided for in Article 17.

The share of the total expense to be paid by each country shall be determined by the division of the contracting and acceding States into six classes, each of which shall contribute in the proportion of a certain number of units:—

1st Class	25 Units
2nd „	20 „
3rd „	15 „
4th „	10 „
5th „	5 „
6th „	3 „

These co-efficients will be multiplied by the number of States of each class, and the total product thus obtained will give the number of units by which the total expense is to be divided. The quotient will give the amount of the unity of expenses. Each State will declare, at the time of its accession, in which of the said classes it desires to be placed.

The Swiss Administration will prepare the budget of the office, superintend its expenditure, make the necessary advances, and draw up the annual account, which shall be communicated to all the other Administrations.

(6.) The next conference shall be held at Paris between four and six years from the date of the coming into force of the Convention.

The French Government will fix the date within these limits after having consulted the International Office.

(7.) It is agreed that as regards the exchange of ratifications contemplated in Article 21, each contracting party shall give a single instrument, which shall be deposited with those of the other States in the Government Archives of the Swiss Confederation.

Each party shall receive in exchange a copy of the procès-verbal of the exchange of ratifications, signed by the Plenipotentiaries present.

The present final protocol, which shall be ratified with the Convention concluded this day, shall be considered as forming an integral part of the said Convention, and shall have the same force, effect, and duration.
